'Police' Dogs Must Be Trained

A dog of any breed is a police dog when trained for police work. The German shepherd, long used for police work in Europe, is commonly known as the police dog in spite of the fact that the Labrador retriever has been proved by the only tests ever conducted on a practical and extensive basis to be the best breed for police work. For some reason, black German shepherds are commonly referred to improperly as Belgian shepherds. There is, however, a Belgian sheepdog which is rarely seen in this country. It may be black, but not necessarily so, and either long-haired or short-haired. It is a smaller dog than the German shepherd.
