Amusement at Home

Don't be afraid of a little fun at home, good people. Don't shut up the "best room" in your houses lest the children "mess up the chairs" or throw or disarrange the furniture." Don't shut up your heart lest a hearty laugh should shake from some of the musty cobwebs there.

Don't go about the home wearing a long face as though you had lost every friend, all your possessions, and preparing for a funeral. Make the home bright and pleasant and do not stop the jokes and laughter of the children.

If you want to ruin your sons and drive your daughters from the family circle, let them understand that all earthly social enjoyment and innocent pleasure must be left on the threshold when they come home from their work or school duties in the evening.

Don't place the restrictions and prayer meeting on the family circle. When home is home is regarded as only a place to eat, to drink and to sleep, to get rested all pleasures and amusements, the work is begun that ends in wine rooms, gambling houses and degradation. Young people must have fun and relaxation somewhere. If they are refused it in their own home it will be sought in others, perhaps less profitable places.

Because when you were children your parents required that you sit in a high-backed chair every evening in the week and most of time on Sunday, and devote strict attention to the catechism, "Pilgrims Progress" or "Fox's Book of Martyrs," do not, forquite the same of the 20th Century boy or girl. They are amidst different surroundings.

The world has changed. Progression is rampant and the boy or girl who is deprived of the sundry pleasures which all enjoy will leave those pleasures or rebel, and then out from the home they go—forced out by the parents who wished them to follow in the old way.

Don't repress the buoyant spirits of fun around the home fireside that blot out the remembrance of cares and annoyances of daily life. The best safeguard children can take with them into the world is the remembrance of a bright, cheerful domestic sanctum. It is pleasant for a parent to hear son or daughter say, "Father, mother and I have such jolly times at home that I do not care for outside attractions."

"There is beauty all around" when there's happiness and contentment at home.

HACKNEY.

Grave Trouble Foreseen.

It needs not little foresight, to tell, that when your stomach and liver are badly affected, grave trouble is ahead, unless you take the proper medicine for your disease, as Mrs. John A. Young, of Clay, T. Y., did. She says, "I had neuralgia of the liver and stomach, my heart was weakened, and I could not eat, I was very bad for a long time, but in Electric Bitters, I found just what I needed, for they quickly relieved and cured me." Best medicine for weak women. Sold under guarantee by Geo. C. Roberts & Co. druggist, at 50c a bottle.

Thursday Club

The beautiful home of Mrs. Maud Robertson was the scene of a most enjoyable social function Thursday afternoon, when Mrs. Robertson acted as hostess to the Thursday club and a number of invited guests. The house was profusely decorated with carnations, smilax and spring flowers. The afternoon was spent in singing, readings from the Bay View Magazine and listening to two excellent papers on the "Oriental Art and Japan" by Mesdames Weichelt and Brockway. Mrs. Austin also favored the company with a solo which was pleasingly rendered.

At 5 p. m. the guests were invited to partake of a most elaborate course dinner prepared and served by an "up to date" Chef.

The company lingered long ever bidding good night to our genial host and hostess.

The club will be entertained next week by Mrs. Lyman Powers.

GLIMPSES OF GORKY.

Story Told Among the Russian Authors.

Maxim Gorky, who was recently arrested in Riga and is described as "the idol of the Russian revolutionary party," has a number of his sayings, among them being a proverb which comes from a flock to a vegetable diet, says the London Sketch of Gorky.

It is said of Gorky that he dined at a table d'hote one day during one of his periods of vegetarianism and was very annoyed by the importunities of an old lady who set opposite him.

"Won't you try, sir," she said, "a little of this chicken?"

"No, madam," Gorky answered.

"Perhaps, then, you would like some of the boiled ham?"

"None, thank you."

"Dear me! But surely you'll have a portion of roast beef?"

"No," said the novelist, continuing to eat vegetables.

"Some roast mutton?" resumed the indefatigable old lady.

Gorky gave her a stern look. "Let me inform you," he said, "that I never eat any flesh but human flesh, and I prefer that raw."

In an autobiographical sketch Gorky wrote:

"My father died in Astrakhan when I was five years old. After the death of my mother my grandfather placed me in a shoe store. I was then nine years old, and my grandfather taught me to read in the psalter and prayer book. I then went to the studies and became a draftsman's apprentice; an army friend has and entered the workshop of a painter of saints' images; then I served on a steamer as a cook boy; then I became a gardener's assistant.

"After my fifteenth year I felt a passionate wish to learn, in pursuance of which I betook myself to Kazan under the impression that knowledge would there be imparted free to the people. It turned out, however, that this was not the case, so I went to work in a bakery at a salary of 3 rubles a month. Of all the kinds of work I have tried this was the hardest. In Kazan I came into rebellious with the 'lost people' and lived long with them.

"I worked on the places on the Volga, now as a woodchopper, now as a porter, and during this time read every book I could lay my hands on, which various kind people supplied me with. I got along very badly and in 1888 even tried to kill myself by shooting bullet into my body. I lay a long time in the hospital, but finally recovered and went into the apple trade."

BODILY GRACE.

Are Woman May Become Lithe and Graceful.

In America we have not yet learned to give proper attention to our bodily appearance. We are so much afraid that if we are comely in the face nothing more is needed. There is no greater mistake. The woman who carries herself in a graceful, noble, queenly way will attract admiring notice wherever she appears, while another will sit or merely pretty girl who shuckes awkwardly along beside her.

In France the streets and parks abound in groups of rare and classic beauty, physical groups of statuary. The people, even the poorest working women, have these exquisite models of grace and beauty before their eyes always. In course of time they unconsciously imitate the grace of the marble. Moreover, the long flowing dress in vogue in France from the time she begins to walk to more her feet and hands gracefully.

Abolishing Round Shoulders.

A common disfigurement is round shoulders, with the accompanying hollow chest. A woman should lift the muscles of her chest and slide down in front upon her stomach, making no persistent effort to sit and stand erect up as a lady should. The results are three round shoulders, a hollow chest and a large stomach. The tendency to unsightly and ruinous slouping must be taken heroically in hand. To begin, let the round shouldered girl stand against a door, she has acquired the very bad habit of sleeping half in a sitting posture, let her take the prone way, one at a time, gradually lowering the head till she can lie upon the bed comfortably with her whole body stretched flat, or, if she have a pillow, let it be a hard one, thin and flat. Feather pillows are heating and bad to bury the face and hair in.

An admirable exercise for filling out the chest and flattening the back is this. Stand erect, weight poised upon the feet of the foot. Extend your arms out straight on to the picture, palms together. Next, rise upon your toes, take a deep, slow, full breath. Exhale this breath slowly, and as you do so bring your arms up over the head and down behind your back. The CHEST AND SHOULDER EXERCISE.

Let your heels descend till they again bear your weight. Repeat this a number times, always taking the deep breathing and rising upon the toes. It will, if you do it right, develop marvelously the stiff, ungainly muscles of the shoulders and back of the girl.

Calisthenic Dancing.

Education in dancing is greatly neglected, I gather. There ought to be in girls' schools a set of dancing ever-ciss planned, especially with the view to correcting stiffness and lumbermess. Short dances, high kicking, leaning the body from the waist, are all easily performed to the accompaniment of music, and they develop agility and makes amusement out of work. Even ordinary dancing lessons may be depended on to make girls graceful in step and movement.

The most graceful and beautiful women the world has ever seen were those who lived in ancient Greece, where was trained in childhood to take part in athletic games suited to her sex, also in dances of graceful motion. Clumsy and ungainly movement on the part of a woman partook of the nature of sin.

If woman can make no greater mistake than to conclude she is too old to dance or to learn gymnastic exercises, her stiffer a woman's joints and muscles are the more need she has of limbering exercises. Let her get it move on.

Proper Sitting Posture.

When some people sit down in a chair they plunk into it as though they were a side of dressed beef, with not a bit more life or lightness about them than that. The right way is to sit down gracefully, lightly, lightly and gradually into the seat. Don't lean back against arms when you sit down or rise. Do not sit upon your backbone either. Sit upon the two great muscles at the back of the hips, with the thigh bones at right angles to the spine. This is the only graceful and hygienic way to sit. Maintain this attitude, with the head and the spine straight, and you will present always a graceful picture. Lolling upon the backbone makes the back ache and causes spinal trouble.
