Mean People.

Henry Russell, the head of the Boston opera, was describing his foreign tour in search of talent.

"They were mean people," he said of the singers of a certain city. "I could do no business with them. They thought only of money."

Mr. Russell smiled.

"They were as bad as the man who discovered the Blank theater fire.

"The first intimation the box office had of this dire came, at the end of the third act, from a tall man who bounded down the gallery stairs, stuck his face at the ticket window and shouted breathlessly:

"'Theater's afire! Gimme me money back!'"

Man and His Happiness.

"Man is the creator of his own happiness! Is it in the aroma of a life lived in harmony with high ideals. For what a man has, he may be dependent on others; what he is, rests with him alone. What he obtains in life is but acquisition; what he attains, is growth. Happiness is the soul's joy in the possession of the intangible."—From Self-Control, by William George Jordan.

Too Far for Business.

"I see King George's uncle is in New York."

"Huh! That's bad for George."

"Why so?"

"What will he do if he has occasion to go and see his uncle?"

NAVY PLAN TO FAIL

Congress Not Likely to Authorize Two Battleships.

DEMOCRATS ECONOMY BENT

Vessels Become Antiquated Rapidly but Majority in House Says Naval Force Will Be Kept Up to the Fighting Standard.

By GEORGE CLINTON.

Washington.—It seems to be the present determination of the majority in the house of representatives to deny the request of the navy department for the construction of two big battleships during the coming year. Officials of the department have convinced some time ago that their request had little chance of sanction by a house which is economically inclined. It seems hardly probable that the senate will insist that the house accede to the wishes of the navy department, although such a thing is within the range of possibilities.

Five years ago Mr. Roosevelt, then president, asked congress to authorize the building of four big battleships in a single year. It was generally believed at the time that colonel asked for four ships in order that he might be sure that he would get two.

The year of the Roosevelt request the Republican majority in congress let it be understood that the intention was to build two battleships a year each succeeding year until the Panama Canal was opened, and by that time it was urged the navy would be big enough for offensive and defensive purposes and that it would only be necessary to build ships as other ships became antiquated and passed out of service.

Soon Become Out-of-Date.

Ships are becoming antiquated rapidly. They seem to get into their second childhood before they have reached the age of youth. The last report is that the Kearsarge and the Alabama, first-class battleships only a few years old, are rapidly going out-of-date condition. The navy department officials say that if no ships are built for some years to come it will be begin building the navy all over again, a proposition to which some men do not accede. The people advocates hope that if no more vessels are built the necessity for future construction will pass and that with Hague tribunals and arbitration treaties, turrets and twelve-inch guns will go to the scrap heap.

Some of the members of the majority in the house say that they do not agree with the peace advocates and that there is no intention of letting the navy go to the scrap heap and that the Democrats can be depended upon to keep the navy up to the fighting standard. The program, however, does not necessitate the building of two great ships this year at a cost of something like thirty million.

Still Quote the Classics.

Northern senators and representatives are rather chary in their use of classical allusions when making their speeches. The southerners are fond of their classics, though growing less fond of them year by year as the new members with the education that is broadening in the south, are it is broadening in the north, come into office. At times, however, to hear one of the southerners speak is as good for the brushing of the cobwebs from memory as is the re-reading after many years of the pages of Smith and Anthon's Classical Dictionary.

The northern men draw comparisons and sharpen their points from modern instances, and yet there is a charm about the utterances of the men of the south. They pass from Homer to the Rienzi of Miss Mitford as readily as if a month rather than centuries lay between. Ulysses wanders in the senate chamber and the voice of the siren is heard from the corridor. Regulus again defies the Carthaginians, while the domes of the African city are "burning with the splendor of noonday."

Gems From John Tyler.

Searching the records one finds that in the elder days the classic habit was stronger than it is today, so strong, indeed, that a man of sixty years ago, writing of one of the speeches of John Tyler of Virginia, delivered some years before, said that there were more Greeks and Romans than Americans in the speeches. The writer set it down that this was "a fault (or virtue) common to his state."

During the debate on the "force bill" of Jackson's time the records show that John Tyler brushed up his classics, his Shakespeare and his Cutler Ciber and delivered himself of this:

"Rather than give my aid I would surrender my station here, for I assure not to imitate the rash boy who set fire to the Ephesian dome. No, sir, I will lend no aid to the passage of this bill. I had almost said that 'I had rather be a dog and bay the moon than such a Roman.' I will not yet despair. Rome had her Curtius; Sparta her Leonidas, and Athens her band of devoted patriots—and shall it be said that the American senate contains one man who will step forward to rescue his country in this moment of peril?"

Spoke Not General Harrison.

Out of the record of the days of Calhoun, Webster, Jackson and the rest comes a story of General William Henry Harrison, of whom the record writer says: "General Harrison was a native of Virginia and received his education there. To his best day he never recovered from Plutarch."

This admonitorion, for as such it is intended, was uttered in connection with the statement that the use of ancient classics was a fault (or virtue) common to the Virginians. The chronicler tells this story of General Harrison and his love for Plutarch, and Daniel Webster's connection therewith.

"President Harrison's inaugural message proved the direction of his attachment to Plutarch. Plutarch's heroes would have appeared therein in still stronger numbers but for an untimely fate that kept them out.

"It was said at the time that the morning before the message was delivered the secretary of state slept (Webster) was met by a friend walking in the vicinity of the White House in no little apparent perturbation.

"'What is the matter with you this morning, Mr. Webster? inquired his friend; 'you seem agitated.'

"'Agitated, sir! and who would not feel agitated, that had committed the murder I have this morning?'

"'Murder! Mr. Webster?'

"'Aye, sir, murder; murder with malice aforethought, of I know not how many Greeks and Romans.'

It may have been of benefit to Harrison's writing style that Webster was a merciless critic.

Remove White House Police.

Finally the order relieving twenty-two policemen from duty is and about the White House has gone into effect. The president and his household still are pretty well guarded, but the difficulty will come when the spring inclination of spectators sets in to Washington. From the middle of February until the first of June Washington is crowded with sightseers, a large part of whom are brides and grooms. The most of them insist upon their inherent right as American citizens to go to the White House "to see the president."

A good many policemen are necessary inside the White House crowds in the springtime. They act as ushers more than as police officers, and they have their hands full. President Taft is much easier going in the matter of receiving people than were some of his predecessors.

Just about one-third of those who come to Washington for to be introduced to the president, and as no representative dares to decline to do so for fear of loss of votes, he takes his home people over to the White House and gives them the opportunity to say "Good morning" to a man who, no matter how he may feel, makes each visitor believe in his or her heart that the president of the United States would have been desolated if he or she had ventured to leave Washington without making a personal call at the White House.

Midshipman "Pete" Russell.

William E. Russell is the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to the Dominican republic. Mr. Russell is one of the picturesque men of the government's foreign service. Once on a time he was our minister to Venezuela when President Castro was in all his troubling glory. When the officials of the department of state and naval officers happen to get together they find stored Willard W. Russell appealing, for the envoy extraordinary is as well known in naval circles as he is in state circles.

Mr. Russell is a grave diplomat with a light in his eye that neither gravity nor position can put out. But he was not always a grave one burdened with the affairs of state. Once upon a time he was "Pete" Russell, midshipman in the United States Naval academy. William was changed into "Pete" the minute that he received at Annapolis, but truth compels the statement that neither the official archives nor the middies' archives disclose the reason for turning William into Pete. Suffice it to know that the middies would have it that way, and that way it went.

Midshipman Russell and a way with him, and the middies and the authorities were not long in finding it out. Pete had difficulty in restraining himself on occasion.

Pete Breakers Under His Bow.

One Sunday at Annapolis the chaplain preached long and drowsily. The listening middies were tired out with the heat of the day and the burden of the sermon, which lasted one hour and ten minutes. The sermon over, a solo in the choir started in to sing "Son of My Soul." He went through the first line mirthfully and then struck into the second. "It is not right," he sang. Then he repeated "It is not right," and repeated it again. The sermon and the song got on "Pete" Russell's nerves. He stood up, whistled melodiously but very loudly the tune accompanying the third and fourth lines of the first stanza of "Son of My Soul," and then before the bewildered and shocked officers could put in an interference, he calmly demanded the soloist to "get a move on him."

They grabbed Pete out from "the middle pew seat and marched him down the aisle under guard. When the corps was dismissed and was marching back to the barracks Pete was going in the opposite direction toward the prison ship Santee, with his books and his blanket swung over his shoulder. As he passed the marching middies and the officers in command he was heard loudly soliloquizing with his head well down in counterfeit abjectness.

"Poor Pete, poor Pete, breakers right under Pete's bow."

LAWYER CURED OF ECZEMA

"While attending school at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1885, I became afflicted with boils, which lasted for about two years, when they were succeeded by the form of an eczema on my face, the lower part of my face being inflamed most of the time. There would be water-blisters rise up and open, and wherever the water would touch it would burn, and cause another one to rise. After the blister would open, the place would scab over, and would burn and itch so as to be almost unbearable at times. In this way the sores would spread from one place to another, back and forth over the whole of my upper lip and chin, and at times the whole lower part of my face would be a solid sore. This condition continued for four or five years, without getting any better, and in fact got worse all the time, so much so that my wife became alarmed lest it prove fatal.

"During all this time of boils and eczema, I doctored with the best physicians of this part of the country, but to no avail. Finally I decided to try Cuticura Remedies, which I did, taking the Cuticura Resolvent, applying the Cuticura Ointment to the sores, and using the Cuticura Soap for washing. In a very short time I began to notice improvement, and continued to use the Cuticura Remedies until I was well again, and have not had a recurrence of the trouble, which is over twenty years. I have recommended Cuticura Remedies to others ever since, and have great faith in them as remedies for skin diseases." (Signed) A. C. Brandon, Attorney-at-Law, Greenville, O., Jan. 27, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed, free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

But Mamma Didn't.

Little Mabel was always tumbling down and getting hurt, but as soon as her mother kissed the bumped forehead Mabel would believe it cured and cease crying. One day she accompanied her mother to the Union depot, and while they were seated in the crowded waiting room an intoxicated man entered the door, tripped over a suitcase, and fell sprawling on the floor. The attention of every one was attracted to the incident, and in the sudden silence following the fall Mabel cried out:

"Don't cry, man. Mamma 'll kiss oo, and 'en oo 'll be all right."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Girls

Read About These Three Girls. How Sick They Were and How Their Health Was Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Appleton, Wis.—"I take pleasure in writing you an account of my sickness. I had a friend of mine who I felt and she said I had female trouble and advised me to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as she had taken it herself for the same trouble with wonderful results. I had been sickly for two years and overworked myself, and had such bad feelings every month that I could hardly walk for pain. I was very nervous and easily tired out and could not sleep nights. I had dizzy spells, and pimples came on my face. But I have taken your Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has restored my health. I think it is the best medicine in existence."—Miss Cecelia M. Bauer, 1181 Lawrence St., Appleton, Wis.

A SCHOOL TEACHER'S GRATITUDE:

Geneva, Iowa.—"I have been teaching school for some years and I have neglected my health because I was too busy with my work to attend to myself properly. I suffered greatly every month and was on the verge of a nervous breakdown.

"I wrote to you about my condition and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the Blood Purifier as you recommended. These remedies have done wonders for me and I can highly and widely recommend them to every suffering woman."—Miss Minnie Shaver, R. F. D. No. 1, Geneva, Iowa, c/o Sam Erickson.

A COLORADO GIRL'S CARE:

Montrose, Col.—"I was troubled very much with irregular periods. Sometimes two months would elapse. I suffered severe headache, was weak and nervous, could eat scarcely anything.

"I took both Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and the result was wonderful. I feel like another person.

"I think your remedies are the best on earth and cannot express my thankfulness to you for what they have done to me. I help my neighbors when they are sick, and I shall always recommend your medicines."—Miss Ella McCandless, Montrose, Col.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that a medicine that did so much for these girls will benefit any other girl who is suffering with the same troubles?

Does it not seem the only sensible thing to give such a medicine at least a trial? You may be sure that it can do you no harm, and there are lots of proof that it will do you much good.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with women's complaints does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.
