President of Grove Board Resigns Post

Village President R. W. Dvorak made good a pre-campaign promise by tendering his resignation as head of the Fox River Grove village council this week. Resigning with Mr. Dvorak was Henry Steffany, member of the board.

The resignations were the result of a promise made prior to the Fox River Grove village election on April 18 which resulted in defeat of a slate supported by Dvorak and Stefany. Both men in an open letter to Grove voters stated they would resign if the three candidates they supported were not elected.

Only one of their candidates, Rez Wright, was elected. James Vyzalek and Fred Dierking, also supported by the village president, were defeated. Frank Ork and Anton Hromadka were elected trustees on the opposition ticket.

It was reported the opposition to Dvorak's group grew out of an economy drive by residents of the community, who are seeking to combine the village marshal's office with a janitor and laboring job. They also seek to curtail expenditures on a village sewer system which Dvorak originated.

The resigning village president had held office for four years. He is a member and also assistant director of the Chicago Crime Commission.

Farmers Study Sales Tax Rules at Township Committeemen Meetings

"Anyone who sells to the final consumer, under the laws of the state of Illinois is required to pay a sales tax." This, in brief, was the statement made by W. J. Hudson to township committeemen at recent meetings held at the Des Plaines Farm supply office last Wednesday, and the Lake County Farm Bureau office at Blue Island Thursday. The object of these meetings was to acquaint committeemen with the provisions of the sales tax and to propose suggestions to the sales tax collectors as to how the Randolph street situation might best be met.

On Randolph Street

Mr. Hudson said that what is becoming clear to them that the laxity in enforcing the ordinance in Chicago with reference to the Randolph street market was causing inconvenience of the farmers difficulties with the sales tax. Ordinarily farmers sell wholesale on this street and are therefore, not subject to the tax. However, most of the produce sold on the market illegally sell retail and are subject to the tax but most of them pass on the expense. For this reason farmers are sometimes being apprehended in an effort to enforce this law.

Growing out of the meetings was the problem of whether of the sales tax people in that their field agents will probably be assigned regularly to the Randolph street market so as to learn the personnel that refuses to this market. It has been the practice of the office to shift one field agent to avoid exposure to possible temptations that might arise in the collection of taxes. Those in the sales tax division are civil service employees and are not dependent on political appointment. Also it is probable that their operations will be more intensive during the afternoons and at times when farmers are not on the market.

When Farmers Are Liable

"We wish to point out," states William Rengel, chairman of the Farm Bureau marketing committee, "that farmers who are subject to the tax will wish to pay their sales tax. The only question that we have is, when is a farmer subject to the tax and when is he not?"

Under the following conditions farmers, the same as anyone else, owe a sales tax:

1. In cases similar to this: The farmer should be registered with the sales tax division at 105 W. Madison street, Chicago, where a roadside sign is maintained for the sale of eggs and customers come regularly to the farm and buy eggs, milk, or other commodities. However, where a farmer has a flock of chickens that may be small, and an occasional dozen of eggs is sold after an irregular fashion, we have what is called occasional sales and they need not be reported. The line is not clear and it is largely one of judgment rather than any rule that can be laid down.

2. The sale of feed to be fed to livestock where the stock is marketed as fattened stock for slaughter or where livestock products are sold, as eggs or milk, is not subject to the tax. For instance, corn sold to feed hogs is not subject to tax. The tax is collected when the hogs are finally sold to the consumer as meat. An exception to this is the sale of seed. The logic of this ruling is not clear and it may be changed in time.

3. Sales of feed such as hay to be fed to horses, is subject to the tax for the reasons given above.

4. Occasional sales of farm implements and the like, such as a stove, fence posts, and second hand automobiles, are occasional and not subject to the tax.

Farmers' Registering

Farmers making consumer sales more or less regularly, should register with the occupational sales tax division, 105 W. Madison street, Chicago.

The method of registration is to pay 3 per cent on a month's retail sales. Blanks will be sent and forms on which to report sales will be mailed each month. It is necessary to mail the form back even though no retail sales are made. In this case, "No Sales" would be marked on the form and the form returned. It is not contended that farmers selling regularly on Randolph street should keep books nor should apply for a number because in most cases these farmers are selling occasionally and not to the consumer. In this case farmers should be warned that any sale that is suspected of being a retail sale should not be made.

The collection department of the retail occupational tax makes it clear that their investigators are not operating on the theory that they wish to enforce the law in a harsh fashion. When farmers are questioned or sent slips, the purpose is not to cause the farmer a loss of time or embarrassment. Investigation must necessarily be carried on to prevent flagrant and widespread violations of this tax, but the procedure is educational rather than a harsh enforcement of the law. Farmers who are questioned are requested to cooperate in making the best of the situation that they can.

Retieve Property Tax

"It is not generally known," stated Farm Adviser C. A. Hughes, "that the Illinois Agricultural association, in its lobby at Springfield, finally consented to support the sales tax on condition that property owners be relieved of that share of their taxes that goes for state purposes. This offset has largely recompensed farmers and property owners who bear a very heavy burden of taxes. The sales tax is productive of a large amount of revenue and, particularly, it is not an expensive tax to collect."
