Take Exercise and Live Long.

Professor D. A. Sargent, director of physical culture at Harvard university, makes in The North American Review a powerful plea for gymnastic exercise. To support the waste of material in his body man must take nutriment. Unless this nutriment is perfectly distributed through his system he cannot be well. In order to have it perfectly and evenly distributed he must exercise all parts of the body. That in a nutshell is the best proof of the necessity for all round athletic exercise that can be given.

The city man who sits at his desk all day eats twice as much as the insufficiently exercised man ought to. He does not use his muscles to work this food off. It stays in his body and occasions the disease known as fat. For fat is a disease and a dangerous one. On the other hand, the drayman, the carpenter, molder, shoemaker, etc., use certain sets of muscles. They strain these muscles, but do not use the rest, so they, too, become diseased. Attention to general hygiene and exercise for the whole body are the remedies for all. Physical exercises have now been reduced to a scientific system, so that all who will may develop their bodies symmetrically.

Professor Sargent, in illustration of his theory, finds that athletes, both private and professional, live long and live in good health. He mentions a number of these. He mentions also the case of Mr. Smith Robertson of Eau Claire, Wis., who began at the age of 69 years to develop his body by dumbbell and horizontal bar practice. In three years he increased his chest measure four inches and the other parts of his body in proportion. Now at the age of 83 he continues his exercises and is as spry as he was 50 years ago.

Drummond's Eye.

"A representative of the higher evangelism" is what Ian Maclaren calls Professor Henry Drummond. Ian Maclaren knew Drummond from his boyhood on till his death and contributes to The North American Review a rarely tender and eloquent tribute to the preacher scientist. He says even Drummond's personal appearance marked him off from his fellows. He was of such singularly noble and beautiful presence that wherever he went "it was as if the prince of one's imagination had dropped in among common folk. He reduced us all to the peasantry."

Of his friend's personal appearance, and particularly of the wonderful power of his eye, Maclaren writes:

Drummond was a handsome man, such as you could not meet in ten days' journey, with delicately cut features, rich auburn hair and a certain carriage of nobility, but the distinctive and commanding feature of his face was his eye. No photograph could do it justice, and very often photographs have done it injustice, by giving the idea of staringness: His eye was not bold or fierce; it was tender and merciful. But it had a power and hold which were little else than irresistible and almost supernatural. When you talked with Drummond, he did not look at you and out of the window alternately, as is the usual manner; he never moved his eyes, and gradually their penetrating gaze seemed to reach and encompass your soul. It was as Plato imagined it would be in the judgment; one soul was in contact with another—nothing between. No man could be double or base or mean or impure before that eye. His influence, more than that of any man I have ever met, was mesmeric, which means that while other men affect their fellows by speech and example, he seized one directly by his living personality. As a matter of fact, he had given much attention to the occult arts, and was at one time a very successful mesmerist.

When the invention of Mr. Apostoloff, a German engineer, comes into common use, the trouble as well as the expense of telephoning will be materially reduced. A small apparatus called a manipulator is in possession of each subscriber. At the central office there is no "hello girl." She is no longer necessary under Mr. Apostoloff's plan. At the central office is a communicator corresponding to the machine at the subscriber's office. The communicator at the central office works automatically. A man who wishes to converse with a friend finds the right number in his telephone book, then presses the buttons corresponding to that number. At the central office the communicator receives the message and transmits it automatically to its destination. Any number of messages may be sent very quickly in this manner, and there is no danger of having the line cut off.

How the modern Greeks did prove themselves worthy of their glorious ancestors, didn't they?

Greater New York will have over 70,000 officeholders. Great heavens!

A Western Banker's Bluff.

"Did you ever realize that there is skill to be exercised in the making of an effective bluff? Nearly every man in a pinch is anxious to frighten the opposition, but everything depends upon the way in which it is done." This was the philosophy of the retired banker, and a story went with it:

"In one of the Colorado towns that have since become cities I was running a private bank, and there was another institution of the same kind in the place. We loaned heavily on real estate in those days, and a sudden collapse of the boom left our securities greatly depreciated. Under such circumstances rumors that we could not pay soon gained circulation, and we had to make the best preparation we could for a run.

"It came in true western fashion, with a rush, with threats and a flourish of guns among the more excited. My rival took the old plan of paying at but one window, making each transaction as long as possible and thus staving off the inevitable while hoping against hope. He announced to the crowd every few minutes that he could pay dollar for dollar, but his anxiety was so apparent that it made the depositors more insistent.

"I took the other tack in making my bluff. I had raked together enough to stand a good stiff pull, so I told all hands to stop everything else and ordered each one to become a paying teller. I also posted notices that the doors of the bank would remain open till every one was paid, even if it took all night. This set the crowd to guessing, and they ceased up a good deal. My next move was to place money in the hands of friends, have them mingle with the mob besieging the other bank and then rush over and deposit with me. This ruse turned the tide, and by 6 o'clock I had more on deposit than when the run began."—Detroit Free Press.

The Star Customer's Joke.

One of the attractions of a certain Chestnut street cafe is a beautiful Angora cat, which is generally very mild mannered and ladylike. The cat passes most of her time sitting upon the cashier's desk. She was posing there one day when the star customer went up to the desk to pay for his noontime meal.

"Did you ever tickle a cat's nose with a toothpick?" the patron asked of the cashier. "It has an awfully funny effect on the animal—makes it sleepy." He had a toothpick in his hand, and, offering it to the cashier, said, "Take this and tickle the cat there with it."

The cashier took the little splinter of wood and passed the end of it over the nose of the drowsy Angora. The next instant puss emitted a scream of anguish and leaped many feet into the air. With tail erect, she clambered up the wall, jumped over the bar, overturned a number of glasses and bottles and finally disappeared through an open trap into the cellar, where for five minutes she seemed to be having a fit. The cashier was pallid with fear. He could not imagine what had happened, and the star customer had suddenly disappeared. After awhile the cashier examined the toothpick and found that the end which had tickled the cat's nose had been generously daubed with tabasco sauce.—Philadelphia Record.

His Editorial.

It was the practice of a certain London editor some years ago to write his leading article or articles at home the night before publication. The rest of the week he did nothing. One night his articles had not come to hand at the office. Ten o'clock came—11, 12, and still no sign of an article. There was commotion in the office, and at last a messenger was sent to the editor's house. He found him with a glass of brandy and water before him and newspapers scattered about. There was no article written. "What do you want?" asked the editor. "The article for tomorrow." "Didn't I send it?" "No; at least it has not come to the office." "Give me The Times." The Times was found and handed to him, and with unsteady fingers he cut out one of its leading articles. This he stuck upon a sheet of paper, and then, taking his pen, wrote at the top, "What does The Times mean by this?" In that form and with that introduction it appeared next morning as the editor's leading article.—San Francisco Argonaut.

The most melancholy end of the century spectacle is that of Greece cowering down like a whipped dog and throwing herself on the powers of Europe to get her out of the war which she herself invited. There is a strange mystery about the defeat of the Greeks by land and sea. With an army which ought to have made a good show, with navy superior to that of Turkey, the whole military fabric of Greece collapsed like a house of cards the moment the Turks faced it. There is an appearance of treachery, treachery deep and foul, somewhere. Perhaps events immediately to follow will reveal where it was.

We doubt the story that two Englishmen have lately been killed and eaten by cannibals in the Santa Cruz group of the south sea islands. Cannibals do not like the meat of white men. They say it is too salty and smoky.

The Best Remedy for Rheumatism.
From the Faltrhaven (N. Y.) Register.
Mr. James Rowland of this village, states for twenty-five years his wife had been a sufferer from rheumatism. A few nights ago she was in such pain that she was nearly crazy. She sent Mr. Rowland for the doctor, but he had read of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and instead of going for the physician he went to the store and secured a bottle of it. His wife did not approve of Mr. Rowland's purchase at first, but nevertheless applied the balm thoroughly and in an hour's time was able to go to sleep. She now applies it whenever she feels an ache or a pain and finds that it always gives relief. He says that no medicine which she had used ever did her as much good. E. J. & E. to Build into Chicago.
The Elgin, Joliet & Eastern railway is about to get into Chicago. The company has excellent terminals at South Chicago and runs a line from the last named point to Hammond, Ind., and from Hammond to South Chicago and Whiting. But it had no connection of its own with these terminal lines, and to connect with them had to use the tracks of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago (Monon) from Dyer, Ind., to Hammond. Arrangements have now been completed by the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern for the construction of a new road from Chicago Heights to Chicago, which will practically make the road a Chicago line and enable it to run passenger trains as well as freight trains from South Chicago and Hammond to Joliet and all points on its line.

The repairing and alteration of the E. J. & E. depot in this city has begun, a force of men arriving this morning and commencing operations. The building is to be thoroughly overhauled and newly painted inside and out. The offices are to be enlarged by devoting the greater part of the present waiting room to office purposes. The repairs were greatly needed, and the depot employes will appreciate the change. When this job is completed the Lake Zurich depot is to be fixed up and remodeled somewhat.—Waukegan Herald.
