Married, at Lakewood, N. Y., Saturday, July 29, Mr. Milton Foksett of Palatine to Miss Laura Dean of Chicago. The groom is one of Palatine's earliest settlers and well-known throughout this section. The bride is a daughter of Timothy Dean, a former citizen of this place, now visiting with his son on the Boyle farm. The many friends of both parties were much surprised to hear of the marriage. They will shortly return from a visit with the groom's relatives in the East and take up their abode in his home at this place. Despite the nearly fifty years difference in their ages, we predict a happy married life for the couple.

Palatine's Personal Property.

Resolutions of Respect.

For the first time in the existence of Columbia court ruthless death has invaded our ranks and robbed us of a dear member, who was a zealous worker and an able counsellor in our humanitarian cause. By the departure of Brother Henry J. Stroker the Court of Honor has lost a good and true brother, the community a useful citizen and the family a loving husband and dutiful son and brother.

Much as we deplore his loss, we are comforted with the assurance that he has arrived in that haven of rest that awaits us all.

To the bereaved family of our departed brother we offer our tribute of sincere sympathy. The wounds which this terrible sorrow made we are unable to heal; but if, by our condolence, we can assist to relieve their aching hearts, we pray those afflicted to accept our kindest sympathy.

Resolved, That the charter of our court be draped in mourning for sixty days, that these resolutions be entered upon the records of Columbia District court, No. 405, that they be published in the newspapers of our village and that suitable copies thereof be made and presented to the members of the bereaved family of our departed brother.

Dated this 27th day of July, 1899.

MRS. H. BERGMAN, Committee

KRUEGER HELD FOR TRIAL.

Bound over to Grand Jury at Secret Hearing at Waukegan.
George Krueger, charged with the murder of his wife and her mother, was held to the grand jury of the October term of the Circuit court Wednesday on a charge of murder at a secret hearing held in the Lake county jail at Waukegan. Justice Von Drusen presided and Attorneys Whitney and Upton represented the accused. Doctors Knight and Foley testified regarding the autopsy. Krueger said nothing. The hearing had been set for Friday morning, but State Attorney Heydecker decided to forestall the public and escape the excitement of a stated hearing, as he heard that many country people were arranging to come and he feared possible troubles.

Would Not Suffer So Again for Fifty Times Its Cost

I awoke last night with severe pains in my stomach. I never felt so badly in all my life. When I came down to work this morning I felt so weak I could hardly work. I went to Miller & McCurdy's drug store and they recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It worked like magic and one dose fixed me all right. It certainly is the finest thing I ever used for stomach trouble. I shall not be without it in my house hereafter, for I should not care to endure the sufferings of last night again for fifty times its price.—G. H. WILSON, Liveryman, Burgettstown, Washington Co., Pa. This remedy is for sale by A. L. Waller, Barrington, and A. S. Olms, Palatine.

KATE CHASE SPRAGUE'S CAREER IN WASHINGTON.

One of the Most Influential Women During Three Administrations.

Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague, who died at her home "Edgewood," near Washington July 31, was famous as the daughter of the late Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, and as the wife of the Rhode Island senator and governor, William Sprague. At one time she was prominent in the nation's affairs and the shining light of Washington society. Death touched her at the age of 59, and during those years she had experienced as much of joy and sorrow as seldom falls to the lot of woman. For three months Mrs. Sprague had been suffering from a complication of liver and kidney troubles, and had consented to medical treatment only ten days ago. She grew steadily worse, and the end came a few minutes after 3 o'clock this morning. At the bedside were her three daughters, Miss Kittie Sprague, who lived with her mother; Miss Portia Sprague, of Narragansett Pier, and Mrs. Donaldson, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The funeral arrangements have not been completed, but the remains probably will be interred at Columbus, Ohio, her father's old home. One will find little in the biographies about Kate Chase Sprague—or Mrs. Kate Chase, as she preferred to be known after her divorce; but for all that she was one of the most notable women in the nation's history. She was one of the most influential, one of the most attractive, one of the most talked about. She enjoyed greater measures of social power than are given to others of her sex. She knew more men of prominence in political affairs and was the trusted bearer of more messages of political importance than commonly comes to the lot of her sisters. She reigned at Columbus, Ohio, in her girlhood. She reigned in Washington. She flouted all the old aristocracy of Rhode Island—and lived to regret it. She was loved and courted and petted—and forgotten. But the man who knows the history of his country knows that Kate Chase was a factor of prime importance.

She was the daughter of Salmon P. Chase, governor of Ohio, United States senator, secretary of the treasury, and chief justice of the supreme court of the United States. She was born in Ohio in 1840, and her earliest surroundings were those of politics and statecraft. When the Democrats and Free Soilers sent Mr. Chase to the United States senate in 1849 her mother had already died, and the little girl was taken to a school in New York, where she studied. She went to Washington as often as possible, and became a favorite with Webster, with Henry Clay and with John C. Calhoun. She was 15 years old when her father was first elected governor of Ohio, and she was even then the mistress of his official residence. She was 21 when, after a re-election as governor, he was made secretary of the treasury in Mr. Lincoln's first cabinet, and she went back to Washington a most attractive woman.

Those were war times. Those were the days when soldier men came home; when mighty matters engrossed the nation; when Grant was rising; when Morton was heard of; when Cameron the elder was a power. And when the war was over, and her father was chief justice of the supreme court, she still held court at the Washington house in winter, at Edgewood for the rest of the year. She was the most admired, the most discussed woman in Washington. And whatever men said was meant to be flattering. In those days and the days that followed she knew Blaine and Logan and Carpenter and Conkling.

She was married in war time—that is, in the later days of the war—to William Sprague of Rhode Island. He had been war governor, and became a senator. He was richer than anybody else in his square little commonwealth—a rough, rude, honest, fighting fellow who had made much money in devising new machinery. He loved horses, and bred them. He loved wine, and drank it—without limitation. He loved women, and married Kate Chase.

Some people said she wanted to make her father president, and knew the value of that alliance. She has denied it. She has said she prayed for the superintendent of the treasury, and his estate went into the hands of trustees. They manipulated it nineteen years and paid $5,000,000. That was the end of it. Mrs. Sprague got a divorce and went back to Edgewood, which she tried to manage. She was a woman of sorrows—and fully acquainted with grief after that, for reverses followed rapidly. William went to Seattle and there killed himself. Ethel, essaying the stage, lost her health, and came home an invalid. Of the measureless fortune which had seemed assured for her nothing was left. And Mrs. Chase was in want.

For years her efforts were directed to saving Edgewood. She was not much of a financier, and the friends who could have helped her were mostly gone. Time after time others rose and perfected plans for relieving her distresses, for discharging the incumbrance on her home. For herself, she turned her hand to truck farming, and made money, but she could not manage and the end was little better. Various plans for the mending of her fortunes were put forth, but the woman, more preme bench for her father, and when that was achieved she was content. Anyway, she married. And then, after three children—one boy and two girls—were born, after she had reigned as a queen at Canonchet, her husband's home in Rhode Island, that husband's fortune slipped away. He could not manage well. But then he did not try very hard.

It is little wonder the Washington friends of Kate Sprague were dear to her. It is little wonder they went to Canonchet, even when they lacked the assurance of welcome from "the governor." It is little wonder they fell away one at a time when Conkling—that Adonis of senators, that Paris of suitors—revealed his preference. And possibly it is even less wonder that Sprague chased the proud New Yorker off the grounds of Canonchet—with a shotgun.

But there is no defending the husband. He had grown to be impossible. All the boor in him came to the surface as his fortune left. In 1873 he failed powerful than any other in Washington from Lincoln's first inauguration to the end of Grant's last term, had outlived her day, and she never recovered.

She was a good and a wise woman, an educated, well read and much traveled woman. And she has died at 59, having touched the height and the depth of woman's power for enjoyment. She was never a woman's woman.

She was a force among men. She never dallied with society; she used its assemblies to further her father's plans—for they embraced her whole ambition. And the women who suffered in comparison with her have little revenge in remembering that she was almost forgotten when she died. She might have told them they never were remembered.

Esterhazy's word is held in such low esteem that no faith is attached to it, even when he confesses to a piece of rascality.—Philadelphia Ledger.

COL. HAWKINS DIES AT SEA.

Natural Feeling of Rejoicing Among the Men Is Saddened by the Death of Their Commander—Twenty-four of the Regiment Killed in Battle.

The United States transport, Senator, arrived at San Francisco from Manila with its flag at half-mast on account of the death of Col. Alexander Hawkins, commander of the Tenth Pennsylvania regiment, U. S. V.

The Senator sailed from Manila on July 1, with thirty-eight officers and 721 enlisted men. The transport was at Nagasaki on July 15, when Col. Hawkins was taken ill with cancer of the bowels. His illness continued during the following day, July 16, when the Senator was at Yokohama, and two days later he passed away at sea.

When the Tenth Pennsylvania sailed from San Francisco for the Philippines last year the muster comprised 850 men. Twenty-four were killed in battle or died in the Manila hospital and the rest of the sick and wounded to the number of seven are on the hospital ship Relief.

Like the Oregon and Nebraska regiments, the Pennsylvania troops prior to sailing from Manila voted in favor of being mustered out in San Francisco.

Plano Jones Mower
Longest Lived and Lightest Draft Mower in the world. It has no vibration.

no noise, no lost power. No cog wheels to wear out. Free from side draft and free from neck weight. No hacking up to start in the grass.

THE PLANO is the simplest and best.

The following are a few of the points why the Plano machines are the best over other makes:
In the Plano Jones Lever Bladed Mower the cutter contains only 16 pieces, while the Deering has 44, the Scudder 28 and the Champion 33.
It is the only mower put up with lever power, carrying spring, friction clutch, reel and jointless main frame.
The main drive wheel is two inches wider than any other and, consequently, the machine will run true or settle down in soft or grass ground.

Farmers should examine this machine before placing their order.
