Citizens of Chicago Will Work For a Senator From That City.

A movement has been inaugurated in Chicago for the purpose of protecting that city against the threatened these people there will be an outgoing los of its rightful representation in the United States senate. It is not designed to further the ambitions or interests of any one candidate, but is solely in the interest of Chicago and should command the approval and support of all Chicago citizens without regard to party or faction is not open to serious question.

Chicago's right to a representative in the national senate has been recognized for half a century. From the time of Stephen A Douglas to that of William E. Mason the line of Chicago secators has been broken only twice.

Custom and tradition have confirmed go's needs and the vast importance of the various interests centering there. It has been said, and is a fact, that Chicago's claims to one of the senatorships, indeed, could be fully justified on account of its enormous population as compared with that of the rest of Illinois. It is not only the second city in the union but the number of its people is not much less than half the entire population of the state. Even more important considerations are furnished by its wealth and its great manifold interests that are to be conserved. The Daily News says editorially, and its sentiments are those of the press of the great city, with the exception of Mr. Lorimer's organ-the Inter Ocean-and the Journal, which are generally opposed to any project favored by the other papers: "The demand that this city shall not be deprived of the right which has been so thoroughly established and so long recognized does not spring from civic pride merely, nor from a sense of what is properly and justly due to the maintenance of Chicago's prestige. It rests upon the practical need of this great business center for the representation of a senator who is ini touch with Chicago's commercial, social and political life. The business men of this city have now to consider whether the needs of Chicago as they may now be affected by legislation at Washington do not make it of prime importance that Chicagoans rally to the support of the movement to retain the senatorship. There are, of course, men of high ability, wide experience and honorable lives among Chicago's citizens who would be an honor to the city and the nation as senators. Concerted action by the people of Chicago and by the republican legislators from Cook county can secure the election of such a man." There seems to be a disposition on the part of a number of republican members of the legislature to fayor Chicago in this matter. The members who are opposed to what they call the Lorimer-Hopkins-Yates machine :ule or ruin policy, will ask Mr. Hopkins stand out in bold relief, and the least to desert that combination. If he does so, well and good. If he refuses he may be defeated by a combination and a Chicago man chosen. While Mr. Hopkins has a large support in the legislature to convene next January he has not yet been elected to the United States senate.

A NEW WAY ROUND THE WORLD. KENTUCKY TOWN From Paris to San Francisco With But One Change of Cars-The Overland Limited and the Trans-Siberian Express.

Travel from the far east to London and other European points which has heretofore sailed from China, Manchuria, The Philippines and Japan through the Suez Canal, is likely hereafter to follow the Royal Mail, which it has recently been demonstrated, can be brought to London through San Francisco and across the United States three or four days more quickly than via the old route.

The traffic department of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway has advices that the Russian Ministry of the Interior has arranged with the International Sleeping Car Co., for new sleeping car service on the Trans-Siberian Railway, between Moscow and Port Arthur, to be weekly at first, tri-weekly later on, and eventually a Train-de-Luxe to be inaugurated between Warsaw and Port Arthur leaving Warsaw daily. At Warsaw connection is made with the famous Express Du Nord from Paris, Berlin and other European capitols.

Thus Port Arthur will be within easy reach of Paris, and from Port Arthur the journey is completed in fast vessels across the Pacific to San Francisso and on the New Overland Limited via the Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and Chicago & Northwestern Rys. to Chicago.

Inter-Continental travel is thus practically established through what had, antil recently, been supposed to be the wastes of Siberia; now proven to include much rich farming country which is being rapidly settled. Such circling of the globe will be a delightful holiday beside which the present transatlantic journey takes on a very ordinary aspect.

The equipment for the Siberian Express is to be in control of the International Sleeping Car Co., and the service will be of the highest character, more nearly approaching the American standard than is usual on the Continent

EXCURSIONS TO THE SOUTH. The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad have announced a series of excursions to the South, which should prove popular with the traveling public.

They are so arranged as to best suit the needs of the various classes of travel and in all cases are available for transportation on the daily fast through trains of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois R. R. and its southern connecting lines.

The homeseeker, the colonist and the tourist have all been provided for. The rates vary according to the length of time the traveler wishes to devote to the trip and in all cases Hoback's hotel at Index, Wash., was liberal stopover privileges are grant-

START TROUBLE AT FUNERAL

Enemies Create a Disturbance at Burial of Child and a Clash on the Highway Results in Mortal Wounds -Both Sides Are Heavily Armed.

Caney, Ky., experienced a state of siege on account of a fight between the Frisbee and Mans factions. The child of Bob Frisbee was buried in the county. Kelley and Bob Mans and Gatau Howard, enemies of Sam Frisbee and Frank and Al Lykins, were at the cemetery and began raising a disturbance. Frisbee's friends protested. The Mans boys walked outside the graveyard and dared the Lykins boys to follow. Frisbee and some friends started with the Lykins boys for the hotel by another route when the Man's boys began shooting.

Pitched Battle.

The Frisbees covered their retreat with revolvers and the Howard-Mans faction fired at them at, long range. One or two spectators were slightly wounded and one of the Mans boys received a bullet in his shoulder. Frank Lykins was shot in the abdomen.

After reaching the house Frisbee and his friends stationed themselves at the windows and began firing rapidly at their enemies, when the Howard-Mans faction retreated. An hour later they returned, reinforced by several friends, and riddled the hotel with bullets.

Seek Reinforcements.

In the meantime Lykins and Frisbee had escaped to the mountains on horseback to alarm the neighborhood. Both sides are heavily armed. Frank Lykins will die and Kelley Mans is dangerously wounded. Both factions include men prominent in the affairs of the county. The town has no protection excepting from the county officers, who are powerless because of the standing of the participants in the battle.

CLARK IS FREED OF MURDER

Man Who Killed Wife's Betrayer Is Acquitted by Jury.

Scranton, Pa., dispatch: All day waged the battle of brains between John Mitchell and Wayne MacVeagh in the hearing before the anthracite coal commission. With the close of the session the cross-examination of the mine workers' president by the attorney for the Erie company was still unconcluded.

The most dramatic incident of the day was when a remark by Mr. Mac-Veagh was construed by Mitchell into a hint that the miners' union was an anarchistic body. This aroused Mitchell's anger, and the attorney explained that his meaning was interpreted wrongly.

Mr. Mitchell denied that the union could be blamed for the violence. insisting that the leaders knew it would hurt the cause. He said with so many men idle some trouble could not be averted.

Fight Over Recognition.

The fourth demand of the union, which calls for a yearly trade agreement and which means a straightout recognition of the union, was the bone of contention, and, although four hours were taken up in a discussion of the question, not much material progress was made. Wayne MacVeagh attempted to show the utter irresponsibility of the union and its unfitness to make contracts which it could not live up to. His principal argument was the alleged boycott, and he often hard pressed the miners' president for an answer. The latter, however, slowly and deliberately gave some reply, but they did not always satisfy his inquisitor.

Mr. MacVeagh expressed his admiration of the ability of the witness, and on one occasion, when Mr. Mitchell parried a question regarding the boycotting of a coal and iron policeman by a hotelkeeper, the attorney threw up his hands, laughed, and said: "Mr. Mitchell, you are the best witness for yourself that I ever confronted."

THREE DEEP WOUNDS IN NECK

Train Completes Work of Assassins, the Body Being Severed Just Below the Shoulders-Robbery May Have Been Cause of Crime.

Wheaton, Ili., special: The body of a man, which had been hacked partly into two pieces with a large blunt knife and then laid on the railroad track for a train to complete the dismemberment, was found by James J. Robertson in the yards of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad at West Chicago. Three deep wounds had been made in the neck in addition to the severing of the body. A knife covered with blood was near the body.

Informant Escapes.

Early Thursday morning Yardmaster Robertson was approached by a stranger, who said to him:

"You will find the body of a man on the Elgin branch just east of the Elgin, Joliet and Eastern track."

Robertson immediately started out to find it. The stranger followed him excitedly until near the place described and then turned and made his escape. He cannot be found and because of the darkness Robertson is unable to give a description of him.

Grewsome Sight.

Upon nearing the spot indicated Robertson came upon a hunting cap and then stumbled over the body. It had been severed in two just below the arms. The head and shoulders being inside the track and the rest of the body outside. The body was still warm. In the neck three deep wounds, made by a knife, showed the manner of the victim's death.

The man had worn two black coats of good quality and two pairs of trousers. A duck hunting jacket, but neither gun nor ammunition was found. It is supposed he had come from Chicago after game. Nothing of value was found about the man. His money and watch had been taken, as his clothes gave evidence.

THE TEST OF TIME.

Mrs. Clara J. Sherbourne, profes sional nurse, of 257 Cumberland street, Portland, Maine, says:

"I heartily wish those who suffer from some disturbed action of the kidneys would try Doan's Kidney Pilla. They would, like me, be more than surprised. My back annoyed me for years. Physicians who diagnosed my case said it arose from my kidneys. When the grip was epidemic I was worn out with constant nursing, and when I contracted it myself it left me in a very serious condition. I could not straighten nor do the most trivial act without being in torture. The kidneys were too active or the secretions were too copious, and I knew what was wrong, but how to right it was a mystery. It seems odd for a professional nurse, who has had a great deal of experience with medicines, to' read advertisements about Doan's Kidney Pills in the newspapers, and it may appear more singular for me to go to H. H. Hay & Son's drug store for a box. But I did, however; and had anybody told me before that it was possible to get relief as quickly as I did I would have been loth to believe it. You can send anyone who wishes more minute particulars about my case to me, and I will be only too glad to tell them personally. As long an I live I will be a firm advocate of Doan's Kidney Pills."

Cure Confirmed-5 Years Later. "Lapse of time has strengthened my good opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills, first expressed in the spring of 1896. I said then that had anybody told me that it was possible to get relief as quickly as I did I would have been loth to believe it. Years have passed and my continued freedom from kidney complaint has strengthened my opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills and given me a much higher appreciation of their merits."

CHAPTER XI.-(Continued.) "What do you think it is, captain?" Paul asked his companion.

"It is not a stone, Crack-lash." "No, I can see it move."

"That is why I know that it is an animated object."

"Perhaps it is a horse."

The old man shook his head, say ing:

'No horse could climb these steeps.' "Then it may be a polar bear."

"More likely that than a horse, and yet I think it is neither, as a polar bear is white, and this object has some black spots on it."

They journeyed on until nightfall, and went into camp in a spot somewhat screened by rocks. Next day they resumed their weary march through the most desolate country. The skies became overcast, and the snow began to fall in great white flakes, which rapidly covered the ground.

When night came they halted under the shelter of some rocks and thick, bushy top spruce pine. A blanket was stretched over them, forming a partial shelter.

"We are almost out of food." the captain said as they ate a small portion of the dried moose meat.

"How are we to replenish our stock?"

"I don't know."

It was a painful subject to discuss. Their chances of ever reaching a civflized camp were gloomy indeed. Paul's fortitude was tried to its utmost when, weak and faint, he was continually spurred on by the remembrance that Laura was in the wilds of Alaska.

About the middle of the afternoon the snow ceased falling, and the two men trudged on, sinking into the white covering almost to their knees. Suddenly the hermit stopped and said:

"Do you see that?"

He was pointing to a trail made in the snow by some animal, and Paul answered:

"Yes; what made it-a bear?" "No; it is either a dog or wolf."

The thought of a supper on either was repulsive, and the two trudged on in silence. A mile farther they saw a white dog with black spots on the side of his head drinking at one the lake. He roused himself in a Moment, raised his gun, brought it to his shoulder, and without hardly taking aim, fired.

There was a wild, spasmodic leap, a splashing and plunging. He fired again and again at the struggling beast. With a snort of agony it made a few plunges blindly into the thicket and fell.

Paul roused himself in a moment and rushed to its side. Despair quickly gave way to joy, for here was food. The moose was a giant in size, and would furnish them with food for days. He cut its throat with his knife and then for the first time thought of his companion. He called aloud, and fired a shot in the air, but only the echoes answered him.

"He will get on my trail and follow me," thought Paul, and began to skin the dead moose without feeling in the least uneasy. Having at last completed his task, he built a fire, and, cutting off some of the choicest steaks began to broil them over it. Paul had been on short rations a long time, and never steak tasted better.

Paul wrapped himself in his blanket and lay down by the fire to warm himself and dry his clothing. The night passed in troubled dreams. When he awoke it was broad daylight.

When it was noon and Paul's companion did not come he began to feel uneasy. Could it be they were lost? To become separated he thought would be fatal to both. He roasted and packed away all the moose meat he could carry, and after another, restless night, started out to return to the spot where he had last seen his companion.

The lowering skies portended another storm, and before he had gone five miles the snow was falling in blinding fury, completely obliterating the trail. For hours and hours Paul staggered on until he came upon a great, high wall of stone, which barred his farther progress and partially sheltered him from the driving storm.

He spread his blanket above him, and, finding some dry pine sticks, kindled a little fire, over which he stretched his half-frozen fingers. His suffering throughout that night was intense, and it is a wonder that he did not perish.

But morning came, and, cold and hungry and in despair, he crept away from the great cliff under shelter of which he had passed such a miserable night.

He reached a deep ravine in which was a great deal of dry pine wood, and he proceeded to make a fire. The fire blazed and roared and gave out a generous heat. He was soon warmed, and, wrapping his blanket about him, slept throughout the day. Night came and he awoke, and, building another re, slept throughout the night.

He was tired o' the sea, and I was tired o' havin' him go away so much, so we decided that it was to be the last voyage. He sailed t' the north in the Arctic seas somewhere an' never came back." She sobbed a moment in silence and resumed:

"A long time I couldn't give him up. I didn't believe that he was dead, but at last I had to give in that he was. Two years after a sailor came into port who had been in Jack's crew and he told how Jack and his captain had been led out into the forest by savages on promises o' findin' a great amount o' gold, and both killed.'

Laura, who was very much interest ed in her sad story, asked:

"Why are you going to the Klondyke?"

"I am goin' where I kin make money; where I kin git rich, and help young people, so they won't suffer as I have.

From that time on they became the best of friends. They were together most of the time and exchanged hopes and fears, and both kneeled at night to ask God for guidance in their course in the future.

Their long voyage was at last ended. The great engine was slowly puffing as the vessel was driven slowly into the bay.

The vessel ran to within threefourths of a mile of the shore and dropped anchor.

They had been discovered by the people on shore, who were waving handkerchiefs and hats, firing guns and pistols in the air. The boats were lowered and men climbed into them. "Don't be in a hurry to go, child." whispered Kate, who exercised a sort of motherly control over the girl "There's another ship in."

"Where did it come from?" Laura asked.

"San Francisco, I'm thinkin'. Fact, I know it's from San Francisco."

Poor Laura little dreamed who had come on that vessel, starting after she did, but beating her to the land of gold. Even had she known whom the vessel brought she would not have been able to guess his object in coming to this country.

They went out on deck again to find it cleared of passengers. Another boat was lowered, and they were asked if they wished to go ashore.

"Certainly," said Laura. They descended to the rocking boat, and were pulled ashore by eight sturdy oarsmen. A porter came from the boat with her pretty, white bag, which seemed in harmony with the spotless purity which surrounded them.

She thanked him and gave him a silver dollar for his trouble. Then she turned to go with Kate to the hotel, when she suddenly stopped, started back, and, with a cry of alarma, fell into the arms of Kate Willis. Beore her stood Theodore Lackland, of the lakes. Paul reached for his rifle, but the captain said:

"No, don't shoot him; he may prove our friend."

Paul began to call and whistle to the dog, using terms like the Esquimaux. The animal gave them a look of surprise, and then bounded toward them, yelping in his joy at meeting a human companion.

"He has a collar about his neck," said Paul.

"I say, captain, if we release him he will go back to his master, will he not?"

"Certainly."

"Then we may make a courier of him. Let us write a message, tie it to his collar and send him away." "An excellent idea."

Paul had a small strip of seal skin, and under the embankment he dug out a bit of red chalk, or ochre, usully called keel, and, dressing one end to a pencil point, wrote:

"We are in the forest, out of food and starving. Follow on the trail at once and find us.

"PAUL MILLER AND COMPANION."

When this had been fastened about the dog's neck, he was released and sent bounding away through the forest.

When the dog courier had been dispatched with his message, the two men trudged on a mile or two farther and halted. Evening was approaching, and they were on the banks of a lake in a marshy ground covered with a thicket of bushes. Here they built a small fire and made a supper on a part of their slender stock of food.

Suddenly they were startled by a crashing in the bushes, accompanied by a snort half of terror and half of defiance. Paul seized his rifle and yer goin' that'll be true to ye." both leaped to their feet.

"A moose."

The captain nodded. "It is our only chance for life."

Again the captain nodded. Paul gave him an inquiring glance, and the captain made a sweeping motion with his left hand at the same time disappearing on the right.

Slowly and carefully through the melting snow and tangled thickets Paul groped his way, holding his rifle in one hand and parting the bushes with the other. Hour after hour he trudged on, pausing occasionally to listen. At last he was about to give up and return to the camp, when the crashing of the bushes not far off again aroused his hopes.

Suddenly a dark object loomed up through the night. He only caught a glimpse of it, and before he could raise his rifle to his shoulder it was gone.

Wet to the waist, tired out and despairing, he sank down upon a stone to rest. A dense fog had settled over the low ground, and Paul felt damp and chilly. He was stunned and confused, and only half conscious when splashing feet.

Next day the sky was clear, and he started on his wandering, going in the direction of the Yukon. He slept that night in the shelter of a rock, and the next morning started again on his journey.

About the middle of the forenoon him, and shouted and danced for joy. He ran to meet them yelling like a madman.

At last he came up with them. The leader was a tall man about his own age. He gazed on the being whom hardship, exposure and toil had so completely metamorphosed that he was unrecognizable, and asked:

"Who are you, and what are you?" Paul started back with an exclamation of horror, and well he might. He was face to face with his most bitter enemy, Theodore Lackland. * * * * *

It is necessary at this point in our story that we take leave of Paul for the time being and return to the brave girl whom we left hastening to the dangers and wilds of the polar world for the man she loved.

Laura kept up bravely so long as she could discern the form of Mrs. Miller on the dock, but when it faded from view she fell upon a steamer chair and burst into tears. A hand hardened by toil and softened by love was laid upon her shoulder and a low, gentle voice whispered in her ear:

"Don't cry, pretty one. It's a hard lot ye've chosen, but there's a rich promise in the future for ye."

Looking up she saw the kind face of the woman called Kate Willis bending over her.

"I know, child, it's tough on ye t' go away from friends and relations, perhaps, but ye'll find friends where

"I don't doubt you, my good woman. I don't doubt you," Laura declared. "Pardon this weakness and let me assure you that it will not last long. The knowledge that I shall perhaps never see the face of that dear friend has quite overwhelmed me for the time being."

"Oh, it's nothin', my dear, after ye git used to it; but gittin' used t' it's the trouble. I tell ye, Laura, I'll look after ye when we git to Alaska. Ye shan't work. I'll do it for ye. Them pretty little hands sha'n't do anything to spoil 'em."

"I am not going to the Klondyke to work," answered Laura.

"Not goin' there t' work?"

"That is, I am not going to dig gold from the mines." "Well, what are ye goin' for?"

It was a long, sad story, but Laura was a confiding creature and told her. When she had finished tears were trickling down the furrowed cheeks of her companion.

"Ah, child, yer story is so like my own I can but believe yer livin' over my own sad life. When I was young head. like you, and some said pretty, I had there came on his ears the sound of a lover, a gallant young sailor lad. He always told me how he loved me

> "You unprincipled scoundrel," she cried. "What do you mean by comin' here to frighten this poor child to death?"

"You ugly, hatchet-faced, spiderlegged kangaroo! You flannel-mouthed red-headed dude with brute's milk eyes! You three-card monte, faro bank shark, with a tongue as black as your heart! You-"

"That will do, Kate," interrupted Laura, regaining her speech. "This man's sudden appearance startled me."

As to Two Evils.

Theodore Hallam, one of the most celebrated of legal practitioners, once defended a burglar; and the case gave him a story that he never tired of telling. The prosecuting attorney was fighting vigorously, and had the dedendant's wife on the stand.

"You are the wife of the prisoner?" he asked her.

"Yes," she replied.

"Did you know his mode of life when you married him?"

"I did, sir."

"Will you tell us, then," went on the prosecutor, surprised by this admission, "how you came to contract an alliance with one of his kind?"

"Well," she answered, ingenuously, "I was getting on, the other girls had all been married, and I at last had no choice but between him and a lawyer who was courting me."

Look Out for Your Pate.

So "pate" is slang for head, eh? Wherefore? Surely the word is used in a trivial or derogatory sense, as noodle, noggin, cranium, brain-pan, etc., but its origin is eminently respectable. Shakespeare says "the learned pate ducks' to the golden fool." Pope's epigram is good-

"You beat your pate, and fancy wit will come;

Knock as you please, there's nobody at home."

We have "bald pate" and "shave pate." Why, the word is used once in the Bible, and by David, in Psalm vii., 16: "His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate." Accurately, pate does not mean the head, but the crown of the

> A TRUE STORY. by L. H. E.

Reminisences of past weather are, of course, uninteresting, but the fair days of that April are worthy of reremembrance, and, when the sixteenth arrived, there were many sighs of satisfaction. Most of the young people rejoiced that no cloudy skies or mists off the lake would dull the expected pleasures of the evening, while a few anticipated, with relief in their hearts, the purely financial success of the play and the probable enriching of the church coffers.

No midsummer moon ever shone more enchantingly, no summer breeze ever blew more softly than were vouchsafed that spring night. The little farce was amusing, well rendered and of just long enough duration not to become tedious.

The "dramtis porsonae" was formed of two young men and three young ladies, who after many discouragements, much amusement and finally much conceit, offered their services and the proceeds to the guild.

However, it isn't to be understood that charity is the primal object of the entertainment. Underneath their charitable efforts a spirit of expectancy caused feminine equanimity to be disturbed and masculine minds to hope they wouldn't come.

They being army officers then stationed at Sheridan.

The wish to arrange in their honor an especially pleasant evening had really instigated the play, for the regiment was ordered to western forts, to leave in a few weeks.

Perhaps the one least appreciative of the play was a tall girl, the prompter, cramped in behind a piano on the stage. She proved not needed in that capacity, and not having seen the acting nor having caught one glimpse of the brass buttons proverbially dear to a girl's heart, she emerged at the end with a scowl of impatience and made for the door leading to a large garden.

Several girls called to her, but paying no heed, she hurried on and suddenly found herself so close to a tall young officer, wearing the yellow cavalry stripes, that another step would have caused a collision.

Self Purification of River Waters. The work of examination of the surface waters of this country recently inaugurated by the division of hydrography of the United States geological survey may shed some new light on the old moot question as to how long a distance it is necessary for a river to flow in order to purify itself. This is the question at issue between the cities of Chicage and St. Louis, occasioned by the opening of the Chicago drainage canal, through which the sewage of Chicago is conducted to the Mississippi river via Des Plaines and Illinois rivers, the St. Louis people insisting that there will follow effects detrimental to the waters of the Mississippi at the latter city.

It is well known from chemical analysis and physical examination that a varying degree of purification takes place in a river in the course of its progress

In early days this was thought to be due to aeration, and the tumbling of water down mountain sides became the basis for poetic typification of purity. The experiments of the Massachusetts state board of health have shown that aeration has little or no effect upon the condition of organic matter in waterthat is, the organic matter is not assisted in its oxidation by agitation in the air. It was also found that the highest degree of activity in oxidation processes is to be found in quiescent or stagnant waters. It then became clear that self purification in a sluggish stream is far more effective than in a swift current and that dams and other impediments have a beneficial effect upon the condition of water in river channels.

The promulgation of these facts led to an entire change in the ideas concerning the distance necessary for stream purification, and it is now understood that no hard and fast rules can be set for guidance in determining the purifying power of any watercourse.

The work undertaken by the hydrographic experts of the government will therefore be useful in the determination of the self purifying powers of many of the interstate rivers. These results will be highly beneficial to the municipalities and corporations which may be looking toward the establishment of sewerage systems and purification works.

Extraordinary Railroad Progress. Poor's Manual for the fiscal year ended June 30, just issued, presents a statement of the growth of railroads people are not likely to develop into Pacification In Russia. A vivid notion of what "pacification" is supposed to mean in official Russia is conveyed by an incident which lately occurred at Halk, in the Kharkoff province.

A number of peasants were placed on trial charged with active participation in the disturbances of last spring. The counsel for the defense, eight Moscow lawyers of some position, attempted to put questions to the accused peasants regarding their treatment by the soldiers after the outbreak. The president of the court at once intervened and refused to allow such questions to be answered. The lawyers then retired for consultation and on their return into court read a declaration to the effect that they could not continue their pleading after the president's decision. The defense they had wished to set up was that the peasants had already been sufficiently punished by the dragooning to which they had been subjected. The men themselves had been mercilessly flogged, and their women had, many of them, been subjected to brutal outrage. For the court to condemn them to any further punishment would be to violate the legal principle that no one can be punished twice for the same offense. After the Moscow lawyers with one exception had thrown up their briefs the defense was intrusted to a local lawyer appointed by the court, and in the end the peasants were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, ranging from three to six months.

The world has heard much in recent years about the improved conditions of Russia, but this incident would seem to indicate that there is yet much room for improvement.

Porto Rican Election Troubles. Let us not think too severely of the Porto Ricans or despair of their becoming good American citizens because of an election riot or two. We have this sort of thing right here at home now and then. After a century and more of self government we good Americans occasionally attempt to shoot, cut or maul a candidate into office. All this is to be condemned, but it does not necessarily argue total depravity or incapacity for self government.

The Porto Ricans are on their first legs as individuals in their own right. Spain has gone, but the hot sun and the hot blood remain. They must be reckoned with in forming a judgment of all performances in the island. The

"You will pardon me-no-I am too tired."

The truth was she was bored. All girls do not crave insincere flattery and she was one of them, not knowing, in this case, the earnestness of the young man's attention. At first he had seemed so tall and brave and heroic that she experienced a keen liking for him, but judging him to have proved just another man to admire and compliment her as a pastime, her fancy for him vanished and she wished to be alone.

Army officers love and are loved many times. A new divinity at each station and only pleasant recollections instead of broken hearts are transferred to the next post. They accept affection or indifference with much the same attitude. Affection holds them; indifference sends them to "pastures new."

The decision of the anthracite arbitration commission to have the new wage scale, if one is arranged, take effect from Nov. 1 will save much valuable time and no doubt prevent some wrangling later on in the deliberations. As the matter was left open by President Roosevelt there would have been long arguments on it by each side. Now the operators and the men can make their calculations from a definite base.

There are indications that we will soon have "The Story of Dorothy Mac-Lane." Dorothy is the sister of Mary, and Dorothy has eloped with a man she has known less than a week. It would seem as if Dorothy's story ought to be the more interesting of the two.

Their rioting over elections or from any other cause is of course discreditable, and the spirit which prompts it should be frowned upon, but meanwhile it is well enough to remember that election disorders are not confined to Porto Rico. We have yet something to do in the way of making political campaigns and elections orderly and above criticism in some of our great cities, like New York, Chicago and Philadelphia, and indeed in some rural communities. Better pluck the beam from our own eye before going too fiercely after little Porto Rico's mote.

There has been talk of a division of Portuguese East Africa between Great Britain and Germany, and the rumor is strengthened by the evasive answers given in the British parliament by the government to inquiries touching the subject. The Portuguese possessions in Africa are of no value to Portugal, and the quicker that country can get rid of them the better it will be off. They bear somewhat the same relation to Portugal as do the Danish West Indies to Denmark. Doubtless Portugal will be wiser than was Denmark and will not refuse to part with possessions which are a constant burden of expense and bring no revenue to the home treasury.

According to the Reading report for the third quarter of the year, the losses in net earnings during the whole strike period for this road were about $6,000,000. The losses of all the coal carrying roads might have been averted had the operators accepted at the outset the arbitration which they finally agreed to. It was a costly experience for the stockholders of these roads.

HE WAS A PAINTER.

A Drunken Prisoner's Excuse In New York Police Court. It is characteristic of almost all the prisoners except the drunks that their chief concern is to secure a delay. They plead and beg for an adjournment, which they know will only postpone the inevitable for a day or two, and that although, through their inability to obtain bail, they will have to stay in prison just the same. The most plausible explanation is that they all are fatalists, always hoping that something unexpected may turn up to stave off Beach farm, Wauconda, were visitors the impending catastrophe. The drunks, on the other hand, are more eager to face the arbiter of their fates, knowing that nothing worse than a fine is likely to befall them and that the sooner it is imposed the sooner it may be paid or served off. And then there is the chance, if the magistrate is in > good humor, that they may get a way unscathed at once. As a rule, although not seldom still in their cups, they are loath to make any incriminating admissions. "No, sir," protested a man who kept himself from falling over by holding on nervously to the bar; "I'm not drunk, 'cause no one's drunk who's not falling all over himself." Excuses of the most wonderful kind, some of them really ingenious, others merely ridiculous, are put forward when the futility of feigning innocence has been discovered. The cleverest explanation of that kind that I ever heard was advanced by a man who, when taxed with having displayed unmistakable signs of intoxication, simply replied that he was a painter by trade.

"That has nothing to do with your condition," said the magistrate.

"Of course it has," rejoined the prisoner. "I was painting a barber pole and kept on twisting after the stripes until I got so dizzy that the cop thought I was boozy."-Edward Biorkman in Century.

HE WORKED THE BANKER.

a Clever Merchant Killed Two How Birds With One Stone.

Recently a wealthy merchant in Paris who does an extensive business with Japan was informed that a prominent firm in Yokohama had failed, but the name of the firm he could not learn, though he was most anxious to ascertain whether it was the one with which he did most of his business in that city. He could have learned the truth by cabling, but instead he went to the man, a well known banker, who had received the news and requested him to reveal the name of the firm to him. "That's a very delicate thing to do." replied the banker, "for the news is not official, and if I gave you the name I might incur some responsibility." The merchant argued, but in vain,

PICTURESQUE BRITTANY.

A Market Scene In This Quaint French Province.

Brittany is a land where the peasants till the earth in zouave trousers, toreador jackets covered with arabesque embroideries and green waistcoats around which run lines of crimson. The women wear short red skirts, great medici collars and coifs that flutter about their heads like the wings of doves. From beneath the points of their black caps the children gaze at you with wide eyes full of the curiosity of animals.

These people live in houses built of sculptured granite and sleep in openwork closets carved like the moucharabieks of Egypt.

In spite of the "Breton Interiors" and "Returns of the Fishermen" with which painters swamp the market this race is still unknown or misunderstood, for they should be seen not in paintings, but in their homes, in their old time streets, on market days and when, in fair time, the tents are pitched in the village market places.

Fiery little horses draw to market fish, fine vegetables and all the early produce of Roscoff. They are spread out upon the sidewalk. Chickens cackle; goats bleat; pigs, tied by the leg, strain toward the vegetables, sniffing at the fresh greens.

Farmers in sabots, carrying great blue umbrellas under their arms, with the two ribbons of their felt hats floating down their backs, pick their way among the Dinan china displayed on the ground-capacious soup tureens, cider jugs and plates covered with painted flowers and grotesque figures. The peasants converse with but few gestures; they bargain in gutteral tones.

These taciturn people forget themselves in the barrooms on fair days. The taverns are full of noise. You may hear the sound of an accordion and the plaintive note of the biniou (a sort of bagpipe), leading monotonous dances.

Into the harbor come boats laden with fish; other boats go out. The fishermen are full of business. Next week will occur the departure for the new country. There are women who

But, above all, are we quite certain that there may not be a notable work of genius lying unnoticed and unknown amid the wrecks of the river of time, waiting only for some lucky accident that shall reveal it in all its beauty to an astonished world?

Such accidents with such results have been frequent in the history of the past. Indeed such accidents have preserved or have revealed to the world no insignificant proportion of its now acknowledged masterpieces.

The books of the Bible themselves have experienced the narrowest escapes from what might have resulted in their total loss. The most notable example is that of Deuteronomy, which disappeared from the Jewish world for over a century. The story of its rediscovery by the high priest Hezekiah during the reign of good King Josiah is set forth in the Old Testament.

Shakespeare was practically forgotten in the days when Addison wrote his "Account of the Greatest English Poets," with never a mention of the name of the very greatest, yet it was shortly afterward that Shakespeare was resuscitated.

A House-Warming HANKJGIVING DINNED

IBy Charles H. Rebinson.] It was all on account of the Widow Amesy.

During the lifetime of her lord and master Mrs. Amesy was nothing but an atom flurrying around on the edge of the social whirlwind, but, as a widow with a tidy bit of money left her | the rescue. by the lamented departed-that was another matter. Then, the storm center sought to draw her in and squeeze the money out of her. Being a wise invested her windfall in a little cottage, which possessed three rooms be-

"The cows, widow; I started after woman, she resisted the pressure and them and forgot the slough in goin' cross lots."

Naturally careless and reckless, Mr. ing hand over hand along the limb as the woman encouraging him all the way, he finally reached safety, and, broke his leg and fell unconscious.

When he recovered his senses he was lying on a couch in the widow's little parlor, the widow herself bending over him with a bowl of steaming tes which she made him drink.

"I must go home, widow," said Jimson trying to stand up and walk, but falling to the floor, groaning with pain. Lifting him back upon the couch, the widow bade him lie still while she went for the doctor.

"H-m-m. a very bad case." remarked the doctor after an examination of the fractured member. "Crushed, twisted and broken. How did it happen?"

When put in possession of the facts, the doctor burst out into a roar of laughter. "What a sight! What a chickens, geese, ducks, anything, and sight!" he exclaimed as soon as he recovered his breath.

"What do you mean?" demanded the widow, bridling up.

"Why, your crawling out on that limb and crawfishing back again." The imaginative doctor again broke out into a fit of laughter, which was suddenly checked by a sound box on the ear administered by the angry woman.

"You're here to fix this poor man's leg, not to insult a woman!" she snapped out with fire in her eyes.

"Widow, I beg your pardon," said

At a town meeting, called for the purpose, it was resolved to have the widow's house rebuilt ready for occupation on Thanksgiving day. Some furnished money, others contributed materials, and others still volunteered to do the work.

There were delays and setbacks. however, as is usual whenever any work is promised at a certain, fixed time, so that when Thanksgiving morning arrived the problem of completing the job became knotty, but having been promised and undertaken, it had to be finished. By hard thinking 'Squire Hobbs conceived the idea, and to carry it into effect, he summoned his fellow townsmen and laid the matter before them.

"You women folks," said he by way of consulting them, "you women folks go home and cook up what you've got in the house just the same as if you were going to get dinner-Turkeys, cranberry sauce. The pumpkin and mince pies are already ripe on the pantry shelves. Then bring everything here by 4 o'clock. We men will finish this house for the widow by that time, and we'll all . eat our Thanksgiving dinner on the spot. It will be a house warming Thanksgiving dinner and an old-fashioned barn-raising combined. There'll be board tables laid outside for those who can't get inside the house. "Oh, Billy Dick!" was all she could say, for telegrams came so seldom that they always frightened her.

"It's-it's probably from Mrs. Walker," suggested Billy Dick in his reassuring manner. "Open it and see." "Mrs. Walker is in Turkey," laughed

Mrs. Norton at his comfort.

Billy Dick tore the envelope open and Mrs. Morton read the telegram aloud:

"On way East. Arrive Thanksgiving 10 a.m. "John and Dorothy." "Goodness!" cried Billy Dick. Uncle Jack and Aunt Dot to visit us!" and he capered around the table. "Yes, it is nice," said Mrs. Morton,

"but, Billy Dick, they're to arrive ly to worry a lady." Thanksgiving day, and that means our other plans are spoiled."

Billy Dick hadn't thought of that. that certainly wasn't pleasant, for the expedition they had planned was to go down to Norfolk, for the father, who was in the navy, was unable to leave the yard to come home for the holiday. And such a cooking time as they had had. Capt. Morton had written that the food there was poor, and if they came down to bring some "frills," and it was the "frills" that Mrs. Morton was now packing in the bag, "And-it busts our plans?" echoed Billy Dick. "O mother!"

> So the time passed away quickly, till word was brought to them that there had been a wreck on the road and that no train could run through to Norfolk that night.

> "But I must go," said Billy Dick. "My father is waiting for me. I'll give them a dollar if they can let me through."

> A dollar was a large sum to. Billy Dick, and as it was all he had it was a valuable offer.

The colored waiter showed his teeth pleasantly. "Sho', dey ain' gwine lef eben de pres'dent troo," he said. "Sorry, sah."

Billy Dick looked frightened. "Butbut," he said, "my father was to meet me and telegraph to mother that I got here all right, and mother'll be so worried. And father says it is coward-

"Well, well, it is too bad," said the old gentleman. "Your father won't worry because he knows I am here, and we'll telegraph to your mother if you like."

So Billy Dick ate the rest of the supper, convinced that a small boy couldn't do much to clear the railroad if they would not even do it for the president himself.

After the ice cream was finished. they went to the telegraph office and sent the telegram.

"Can you give mother my love?" asked Billy Dick.

The old gentleman chuckled and nodded.

her avails and compelled her to look | stopped her. around for the wherewith to satisfy the cravings and clamors of her physical nature, for she was a jolly and weighty specimen of widowkind. As the doctor frequently said of her:

"The widow Amesy is a good-sized chunk of a woman; able to take care of herself and stand on her rights."

For some inscrutable reason the widow had set herself up as the champion of the weak-men, women or children, there was no difference to her-even in the case of a helpless bird or dog, she would ruffle up as if she had the feathers of a motherly hea guarding her brood from the attacks of a ravenous hawk, and stay the injurious hand. To the sick and suffering she was kindness personifled, and her gentle disposition combined with her physical strength and the knowledge of how to use fit brought her into constant demand as a skillful nurse. Everybody knew her, respected her and had reason to be grateful to her for services performed at some period or other, and was ready to fight for her if the occasion required war on her behalf.

There was once a faint breath of scandal, but the doctor dissipated it in the most startlingly vigorous manner, and after, that, neither it nor any other ill-wind blew in her direction.

"If that woman isn't a saint, she's next door to being one." was his wind-up when he told the story.

Mr. Adoniram Jimson was the individual in question. A "ne'er do well." but he took care of the widow's cow and calf, looked after her chickens and ducks as a labor of love, and to reciprocate many of her little surreptitious acts of kindness in the shape of fresh baked bread, an occasional roast chicken or a luxuriant pie, that found its way into his scant pantry. He accepted and ate everything he found there in a perfunctory manner, somewhat after the style of the ravenfed prophet, or rather like the hog under the oak, that roots up and dewours the succulent nuts, without ever fooking up to see whence they come.

It so happened, late one evening, that Mr. Jimson started after the widow's cow and calf that had been wandering among the brush all day for pasture, and had apparently forgotten the way home. It had been and the numerous sloughs, riverbeds, to the ground.

"No, no, widow, for God's sake, go back. You'll mire yourself an' both of us'll be lost."

"I have it," said the widow, quickly taking in all the surroundings. "Have patience, Mr. Jimson, and do not struggle, or you will sink faster," then adding under her breath: "I must do it; there's no time to get help; besides, nobody can see me."

The big lower limb of a sycamore tree stretched out over and beyond him, but out of his reach, and her thought was, that if she could clim out on the limb, her weight would bend it down so that he could seize hold of it, and either draw himself out or hold on to it until she could procure other aid.

She climbed the tree and reached the big limb after encountering numerous bruises and scratches, which, however, she did not heed. Then resting a moment, she stretched her body out along the branch and began to crawl slowly toward Jimson, who soon understood what she intended to do.

"Widow," he cried imploringly, "you'll fall off an' be lost. Never mind me, widow, I ain't of no account; I'm in my last hole, an' it's jest as well. For God's sake, widow, go back; don't resk your life for me!"

"Be still, poor man," said the woman, crawling slowly along, her arms and legs clasped around the limb. It began to bend with her weight at last, but she still kept on, almost falling off, for the limb was growing smaller and she could not grip it tight. She flattened her body down upon it like a worm crawling on a quivering twig, all the time telling Jimson to cheer up and she would save him. The limb bent lower and lower still, until Jimson had a tiny branch in his grasp.

"Now, hold on tight," the widow commanded, "and keep still. I am going back, and when my weight is off the limb it will spring up and pull you out."

So saying, she began to crawl backward cautiously, lest a single slip should throw her off her balance and her efforts prove in vain. The broken, jagged twigs and branches caught her dress and pierced her flesh, but with resistless force she bore her whole weight backward against them and tore herself free, reaching the trunk raining steadily for forty-eight hours. in safety, whence she dropped panting

"It will be six weeks before he can crawl about on crutches, and two months before he can attempt to walk," was the fiat when the operation had been completed.

"Six weeks? Two months?" groaned Jimson. "Le'me go home. I must go home." and he attempted to rise, compelling the doctor to hold him down on his back.

"But the cow, widow, I must git the cow," said he plaintively.

"Never mind the cow, Mr. Jimson," said the widow; let it go to Halifax. You've got to lie still for six weeks or two months. I'll take care of you." And she did take care of him, pulling him through until he was able to walk.

Not long afterward, about ten days before Thanksgiving day, the widow's little house was burned to the ground. all she had in the world being consumed with it. Of course, the house was not big enough to accommodate all the merry crowd that wanted to get into it, but those who could not squeeze in gathered around it as close as they could to eat and hear the speeches of the notables, who practiced oratory until the small boys notified them that the fuel had given out. Then they all went home tired, but full and happy. Was the widow happy? Not a bit more than the others.

The door opened and Mrs. Morton came briskly out. "I have it, Billy Dick, I have another plan. We mustn't disappoint your father entirely. You and the goodies shall go to Norfolk, while Rosy Posy and I stay at home and receive Uncle Jack and Aunt Dot. Could you go alone?"

Billy Dick began to grow tall. He felt on a level with his pretty mother's shoulder as he answered:

"Why, of course. That would be jolly, except for you and Rosy Posy."

So Billy Dick started that atternoon, with a dollar in his pocket, and his ticket carefully stowed away in an inside pocket. It was a three hours' journey, and he had to change cars them. twice.

As he stepped off the train a little old man with white hair and a jolly smile came up to him.

"Well, well, well," he said, "how you have grown! This is Billy, isn't it? Yes? Well, I declare-come right along with me. The train is late, and we'd better get some supper here."

Billy Dick wasn't quite sure who the old gentleman was, but as he seemed familiar with him, why of course it was all right. It would not be polite to ask him who he was, and a Morton is always polite, you know. Probably it was great-uncle Howell, whom he had seen years ago. Yes, it must be, thought Billy Dick, though he did not know that he lived in Richmond.

So the two went off together across the street and round the corner to a hotel.

Billy Dick had never been in a hotel before, and before he was half that as soon as he was big enough he would persuade the family to come there-it was so nice to have hundreds of things to eat all written out so you might choose as many as you wanted.

The two sat there, the very old man fied at once, and his "great uncle

In fact, Billy Dick forgot all about his new-found uncle, for his father was so glad to see him safe and sound.

"I must telegraph your mother at once, Billy Dick," said his father. "She has been almost worried to death about you when I could not telegraph her that you had arrived."

"But great uncle Howell telegraphed -didn't you?" asked Billy Dick, turning to the old gentleman, who was greeting some friends.

"Who?" asked Capt. Morton.

"Why," began Billy Dick, and as he noticed that his father didn't shake hands with the old gentleman, and that the old gentleman apparently didn't know his father, he introduced

"This is my father; don't you remember him?" he said.

"Your father!" exclaimed the old gentleman. "Your father is my nephew, William Walters."

There surely was some mistake somewhere, or was he dreaming?-

"Aren't you Billy Waters, William Walton Waters?" asked the old gentleman.

"l am Milton Montgomery Morton, sir," said Billy Dick.

"You said your name was Billy," said the old man.

"Billy Dick," explained Capt. Morton. "He's always been called that because----

Then the old gentleman began to laugh, and Billy Dick laughed, too, as did Captain Morton and the other friends that came up. And the whole thing was explained when one lady said: 'Why, Billy Waters' mother telegraphed that he was sick and couldn't come.'

"And-and the telegram?" gasped Billy Dick.

President Gompers' Language Regards Ing Porto Rican Charters Is Deemed Too Severe and It is Eliminated From His Report.

The salary of the president of the American Federation of Labor was increased from $2,100 to $3,000 and the salary of the secretary from $1,800 to $2,500 by the convention at New Orleans. The increases were voted after a long debate, in which thirty delegates participated.

The original resolution, presented by Delegate Victor L. Berger of Milwaukee, provided that the salaries should be $4,000 and $2,400. The committee to which the matter was referred reported in favor of increasing the salary of the president to $2,400 and that of the secretary to $2,100.

The president's salary was first considered. Berger urged that the report of the committee be not concurred in and that the amount be fixed at $4,000, Charles S. Herman of the Metal Workers urged the same thing. Max Hayes of Cleveland, Ohio, offered an amendment fixing the president's salary at $3,000. This was acceptable to Berger and it was carried by a vote of 92 to 58.

Opposes Increase.

Delegate Furuzeth of the Seamen's union, who had vigorously opposed any increase beyond $2,400, declared that the proceedings were out of order, as it required a two-thirds vote to change any part of the constitution of the federation. Vice President Duncan, who was presiding, ruled him out of order and declared the vote regular.

Berger represents the socialistic element, which is opposed to the policy of the present administration of the federation. In explaining his resolution Berger said:

"This is not a personal measure. I say frankly that if the socialists had the power in this convention they would turn out Gompers, Morrison and the entire executive board and elect socialists in order to carry out a socialistic policy in the American red-

PARROT AS A DETECTIVE.

He Knew Wines and the Grocer Had to Admit Theft.

This is a fact, says a correspondent, though you may be inclined to feel skeptical. Some people I knew in the country had a wine cellar and a parrot of peculiar perspicacity. They taught him to know their different wines.

"Ah!" he would exclaim, as they moistened his beak with claret, "77!" or if with a few drops of champagne, "89," "84" or "93," as the case might be. He never made a mistake as to the vintage.

At last my friends thought that the bird was getting uncanny. They quite longed to catch him napping, and one day to try and put him out they sent for a bottle of cheap port from the village grocer. The parrot sipped the port and what did he exclaim but "Best of all! 54!"

My friends tasted the wine. It was peculiarly good. To the village grocer they went and demanded an explanation. The poor man faltered and reddened, and on being pressed for the history of the wine admitted that a butler recently discharged from the family had sold him a few bottles of 54 port from their cellars, and that the bettle in question was 54 port!-Gentlewoman.

No National Union.

The committee on the president's annual address presented its report and declared that it was opposed to his suggestion of the formation of a national labor union. The convention concurred with the committee in discussing that portion of the report dealing with the refusal of the carpenters to grant a charter to the carpenters of Porto Rico, using language thought by many to be too severe, and a long debate ensued on a motion to strike out the objectionable expression suggesting that the carpenters "come down to mother earth," which was finally eliminated.

The rules of the convention were suspended and Delegate James O'Connell presented the fraternal delegates. Edwards and Arrandale of Great Britian, with gold watches and Delegate Kennedy of Canada with a diamond ring as testimonials of esteem from the convention.

> Fred Heimerdinger was a product of Barrington, being born here forty years ago. Here his childhood was spent; here was a host of friends. He was the second son of Gottlieb Heimerdinger, brother of Charles Heimerdinger of Vulcan, Mich., and a half brother of Edward Heimerdinger of Woodstock and George Heimerdinger of Chicago. Eighteen years ago he entered the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway as a locomotive fireman. His close attention to duty soon gave him the position of engineer and for some years past he had been running out of Chicago on the Mil waukee division. No more popular engineer ever pulled a throttle than Fred Heimerdinger, and a gloom is cast about the Chicago Avenue round house where his coworkers mourn his sudden passing away.
