

THE NATIONAL FOUNDATION

By A. L. Harris Author of "Miss Own Familiar Friend," etc.
Copyright, 1914, by Cassell Publishing Company.

CHAPTER XVII—Continued.

"My dear girl," said the doctor, "I am glad to hear that your father had some news. I made sure that the footings were on the stairs. But it is only a dream, I'm afraid."

"The doctor told her her son's return at first decided that she would go, but he thought of the overcoat, proved too much for her. "You brought him home, though it was the first thing he said, after he had been killed and cried over."

"You may say," she answered, "you said you would I never doubt it. But it is a sad, home-coming. And here the poor lady gave away and went absentmindedly."

"Her son consoled her to the best of his ability, wondering all the time how she would take it, and he came to know the truth—the truth, which must come out sooner or later."

"The presence of the dead in a dream is a common or less frequent occurrence, but to the less educated classes, consequently Ted was hardly surprised when he observed a decided disposition on the part of the domestic staff, as much as the others, to the upper portion of the house. But he had no objection to it, as he had no way to a feeling of nervousness—of anticipation, when he was alone in the room which was his father's, and the one in which his father lay in his bed."

"He had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

"He did not think he was going to find himself actually growing old."

CHAPTER XVIII.

"An Eye for An Eye." The room which he entered was the one which had been his father's private study. Consequently, there was full furniture. He now found themselves alone in it, and wherever they turned their eyes he lighted upon some token of the presence of the other sister. The two halliats which were inseparably connected with the room were a sheet of writing paper with some things written on it lay upon the blotting pad, and the pen which he had just used lay beside it with the ink dried upon it. Everything spoke of the dead. His spirit seemed to pervade the room, which he might only at that moment have quitted.

"Ted's eye was caught by the sheet of paper lying upon the writing table, with something written upon it. It was on the desk, and he saw it was far better to left home, and beneath it."

"My dear," he said, "I had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

"He did not think he was going to find himself actually growing old."

"The presence of the dead in a dream is a common or less frequent occurrence, but to the less educated classes, consequently Ted was hardly surprised when he observed a decided disposition on the part of the domestic staff, as much as the others, to the upper portion of the house. But he had no objection to it, as he had no way to a feeling of nervousness—of anticipation, when he was alone in the room which was his father's, and the one in which his father lay in his bed."

"He had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

"He did not think he was going to find himself actually growing old."

But the idea was rejected as one as far as the room which he entered was the one which had been his father's private study. Consequently, there was full furniture. He now found themselves alone in it, and wherever they turned their eyes he lighted upon some token of the presence of the other sister. The two halliats which were inseparably connected with the room were a sheet of writing paper with some things written on it lay upon the blotting pad, and the pen which he had just used lay beside it with the ink dried upon it. Everything spoke of the dead. His spirit seemed to pervade the room, which he might only at that moment have quitted.

"Ted's eye was caught by the sheet of paper lying upon the writing table, with something written upon it. It was on the desk, and he saw it was far better to left home, and beneath it."

"My dear," he said, "I had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

"He did not think he was going to find himself actually growing old."

"The presence of the dead in a dream is a common or less frequent occurrence, but to the less educated classes, consequently Ted was hardly surprised when he observed a decided disposition on the part of the domestic staff, as much as the others, to the upper portion of the house. But he had no objection to it, as he had no way to a feeling of nervousness—of anticipation, when he was alone in the room which was his father's, and the one in which his father lay in his bed."

"He had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

"He did not think he was going to find himself actually growing old."

"The presence of the dead in a dream is a common or less frequent occurrence, but to the less educated classes, consequently Ted was hardly surprised when he observed a decided disposition on the part of the domestic staff, as much as the others, to the upper portion of the house. But he had no objection to it, as he had no way to a feeling of nervousness—of anticipation, when he was alone in the room which was his father's, and the one in which his father lay in his bed."

"He had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

"He did not think he was going to find himself actually growing old."

"The presence of the dead in a dream is a common or less frequent occurrence, but to the less educated classes, consequently Ted was hardly surprised when he observed a decided disposition on the part of the domestic staff, as much as the others, to the upper portion of the house. But he had no objection to it, as he had no way to a feeling of nervousness—of anticipation, when he was alone in the room which was his father's, and the one in which his father lay in his bed."

"He had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

"He did not think he was going to find himself actually growing old."

"The presence of the dead in a dream is a common or less frequent occurrence, but to the less educated classes, consequently Ted was hardly surprised when he observed a decided disposition on the part of the domestic staff, as much as the others, to the upper portion of the house. But he had no objection to it, as he had no way to a feeling of nervousness—of anticipation, when he was alone in the room which was his father's, and the one in which his father lay in his bed."

"He had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

"He did not think he was going to find himself actually growing old."

"The presence of the dead in a dream is a common or less frequent occurrence, but to the less educated classes, consequently Ted was hardly surprised when he observed a decided disposition on the part of the domestic staff, as much as the others, to the upper portion of the house. But he had no objection to it, as he had no way to a feeling of nervousness—of anticipation, when he was alone in the room which was his father's, and the one in which his father lay in his bed."

"He had a good mind not to go to bed, but he did it all the same. He read something humorous. He mused at his own cowardice. When he awoke at five o'clock, he found his father lying in his coffin, with the lid raised, and the doctor sitting by the side of it. He turned up the gas and closed the window. "The innocents abroad."

NEWS NOTES

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS THROUGHOUT THE STATE.

NEURO STAYS WIFE TO DEATH.

Accused Her of Spending The Month Money on Her Math. John Williams, who was arrested for the murder of his wife, Annie Williams, by strangling her service, was held in jail at St. Louis, Mo., for the murder of his wife. Williams claims that his wife was killed by a blow on the head with a mallet. Williams said that he was in the room with his wife at the time she was killed. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

DETS LAST LOOK AT STATE.

Father Jails Personal Possession as it Leaves for the County. After a four-year separation from his wife, the father of a family of five children, was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

PIKE PATTON PLACED IN JAIL.

Deputy County Clerk of St. Clair County, Mo., was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Greets France Franchise.

A franchise was granted by the state of Missouri to the French League and Community Telephone company, to operate and maintain a telephone system in St. Louis, Mo. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Epidemic of Grip.

An epidemic of grip, accompanied by pneumonia, is prevalent in St. Louis, Mo. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Wife to Walk to Prison.

A woman was held in jail for the murder of her husband. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Man's Survival.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Being for Coal.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Big Coal Land Warrants.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Death of Wealthy Woman.

A woman was held in jail for the murder of her husband. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Home Traveling Man.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Pastor Accepts Call.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Violates School Law.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Children Are Converted.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Consolidates Manufacturers.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Man Pays for City Employees.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Retires Episcopal Pastor.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.

Wants to Be Admitted as Member.

A man was held in jail for the murder of his wife. Williams was held in jail for the murder of his wife.