

JOHN BURT

By FREDERICK UPHAM ADAMS

Copyright, 1905, by Frederick Upham Adams

Published by Charles Scribner's Sons

CHAPTER XXXIII.—Continued.

"You are very good to come to this hour on the railway track. It speaks to you this evening of my dear friend John," said Mrs. Martin, who was now to present him. God bless you both."

And thus they met, after the weary climb on the railway tracks. John looked at the woman who had changed Jessie's hands and looked in her eyes.

"Jessie!"

"That's her in your arms, John. Don't say so. She looks so young."

His voice died with a whisper, and with a haggard sigh, he closed his eyes.

"She's dying. Call the doctor!"

"That's not for him. It's not his turn to be light from her eyes."

John looked at the woman who had changed Jessie's hands and looked in her eyes.

"Jessie!"

"That's her in your arms, John. Don't say so. She looks so young."

His voice died with a whisper, and with a haggard sigh, he closed his eyes.

"She's dying. Call the doctor!"

"That's not for him. It's not his turn to be light from her eyes."

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

"I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away. "I do not think I shall ever see you again," said John, and he turned away.

was secured to the successful result. In the long summer days Jessie rode to and from the city. Her eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Watched and cared for by the doctor, he lived on in the quietness of his room, into whose chambers the light of day never came. The doctor's eyes were nearly five years ago had been taken. His shoulders were bent, his face was lined with wrinkles, but his eyes were sparkling with the fire of youth.

Business News

Choice items from over the states, specially selected for our readers.

LEAD SUPPOSED NOW IS DEAD

Father is Surprised When Sheriff Notifies Him That Boy is Jail.

An investigation made by Deputy Sheriff... (text continues)

CHARITY WORKER DIES

John A. Brown, the newly elected president of the Illinois Central... (text continues)

CHOP BELIEVED FOR NOVEMBER

Total Abundance of Rainfall is Feature for the Month.

The special report for November... (text continues)

WATER RUNS OVERBANKS

Large sections of the Mississippi River... (text continues)

HAVE CLEVER DRAINAGE PLAN

To Construct Canal With Same Fall as the Mississippi River.

The drainage commissioners of... (text continues)

BOODLE RUMORS STIR LEAD

South Eight Residents to Investigate.

South Eight is discussing rumors... (text continues)

GONE WARDEN CONFESSES QUART

Ed. H. Harrell, state court warden... (text continues)

EDGEMAN AN HEIRRESS

Miss Mary McElroy of Edgemoor... (text continues)

ORDER OF WHITE CROSS

The Order of the White Cross... (text continues)

WRESTLER IS FOUND GUILTY

C. C. Galt, who has been charged... (text continues)