

PORT ARTHUR SIEGE IS ENDED: STOESSSEL GIVES UP

Brave Russian Commander to Surrender Before the Determined Assaults Made on the Fortress by Gen. Nogli Japanese Victory Costly One.

Gen. Stoessel surrendered Port Arthur, Jan. 1.

London, Jan. 1.—The news that Port Arthur has fallen to the hands of the Japanese, and that General Stoessel has surrendered, is a historic event.

The capture of the heroic Russian commander followed upon a month of desperate fighting, in which the Russian forces were killed, or wounded, or captured, in the series of fortresses that were successively captured by the Japanese after a seven days' struggle in the town, and a further six days' fighting in the trenches.

The capture of the heroic Russian commander followed upon a month of desperate fighting, in which the Russian forces were killed, or wounded, or captured, in the series of fortresses that were successively captured by the Japanese after a seven days' struggle in the town, and a further six days' fighting in the trenches.

On Dec. 28 the great Korean fort was taken by the Japanese, forcing them another advantageous position from which to assault other forts in the chain of defense. The Japanese were important factors in the chain of defense. They were also the fall of the city.

All these achievements were the result of communications between the Japanese and the Russian forces.

There are the terms of the capitulation. Japanese troops have entered the city. The Russian forces have been ordered to leave.

Gen. Nogli's formal entry into the city was on Jan. 1. The Russian garrison was marched out.

VICTORY HAS BEEN COSTLY.
Many Japanese Sacrificed in Capturing Port Arthur.

Reports to recent the Japanese forces were the end of the city. The Japanese forces were the end of the city. The Japanese forces were the end of the city.

At the opening of the present conflict Japan's heart was set on the holding out for as long a time as possible. Her armies had rushed to fortify.
