BIGELOW LOSES PALATIAL HOME

Receiver Takes Possession of Assets; Leaving Financier to Depend on Son.

BRODHEAD ESTATE SHORTAGE

Former Bank President Admits Taking $50,000 in Addition to the $100,000 Shown in His Petition to Be Declared Bankrupt.

Milwaukee, Wis., dispatch: Frank G. Bigelow, the defaulting banker, was ousted from his palatial home in Astor street Friday, the homestead having been taken possession of by the Wisconsin Trust and Security company as receiver for the Bigelow estate. Mr. Bigelow, with his family, taking little except personal effects, went to the home of his son, Gordon Bigelow, 490 Marshfield street.

The supplementary schedule of liabilities and assets to Mr. Bigelow's petition in bankruptcy will probably not be filed before a week or ten days. Mr. Bigelow did much of his private business from memory and it is this circumstance which is delaying the completion of the schedule.

Brodhead Estate Tangle.

No action has been taken as yet by the heirs of the Brodhead estate looking to the removal of Bigelow as trustee. It is said, however, that Judge Carpenter in the county court will take steps soon to remove Bigelow from the various trusts which he holds by virtue of testamentary appointment. Opportunity will be given the ex-bank president to resign from these positions and if he does not do so the court will take the necessary steps to remove him.

Bigelow has acknowledged that he owes the Brodhead estate $50,000 in addition to the $100,000 shown in the list of unsecured creditors.

Orders Broker to Sell.

It has developed that Bigelow on the day preceding the filing of his petition in bankruptcy telegraphed a broker in New York city to dispose of 100 shares of a certain stock and to turn the proceeds over to a friend of Bigelow in New York. The broker, realizing that the stock had been turned over to the bank as part of Bigelow's restitution, declined to fill the order.

TRY TO FORCE TROOPS ON CITY

Chicago Merchants Endeavor to Show That Police Cannot Protect Them.

ANXIOUS TO HAVE SOLDIERS

Make Call for Protection to More Wagons Than There Are Officers in the City, but Are Compelled to Reduce Demand.

Chicago dispatch: Lawlessness prevailed in Chicago yesterday. The most violent disturbances that have been known here since the American Railway union strike of 1894 marked the bitter progress of the teamsters' conflict. And there now is no prospect of peace.

The outlook, however, is that federal or state troops, or both, will be called for by Thursday night. If the violence of yesterday is repeated today, it is the intention of the business men, united in a solid front, to demand the protection of the law, including the presence of the soldiers.

There were indications yesterday of an impending clash between the employers and the city authorities. The employers shaped their policy in the direction of an attempt to bring troops to Chicago and Mayor Dunne and Chief O'Neill plainly indicated their intention to resist this plan.

Employers Make Demand.

The employers sent the mayor a letter announcing their desire for additional police to protect 1,885 wagons to be started this morning, making deliveries for thirty-three express companies and retail stores. With the mayor's approval Chief O'Neill immediately made a requisition on the civil service commission for 1,000 new patrolmen, and from this number he expects to get 500 extra men ready for immediate service.

At the same time the chief ordered the mobilization of 600 more patrolmen from the regular force, making a total of 1,700 men available for strike duty, outside of the new recruits from the civil service list. When this order is carried out there will be only 600 patrolmen left for the ordinary duties throughout the city. This is the most sweeping order issued in the police department for many years.

Plans Are Changed.

The employers were compelled to modify their plans and agree to start only the additional wagons for which policemen could be supplied.

"It appears that we cannot get sufficient police protection for our business," said a representative of the Employers' association. "Where the police are inadequate it would seem only proper to call in troops."

Mayor Dunne intimated his opposition to this stand, when he said:

"It is the duty of the chief of police to preserve the peace. I am confident he will do it. The entire management of the situation has been turned over to him. I do not intend to interfere."

O'Neill Addresses Inspectors.

The city authorities were staggered by the plans of the employers to start so many wagons, and the impression gained that an attempt was being made to force a confession of police inadequacy. Chief O'Neill called his inspectors into conference and said:

"I have been up against a peculiar proposition. I got a letter from Mr. Thorne of Montgomery Ward & Co. telling me that the intention of the merchants he claims to represent is to send out almost 1,900 wagons from almost as many points in the city, and asking that they be given police protection. There are not that many policemen in Chicago.

Cannot Overwork Police.

"From what I have been able to learn since I do not think the Thorne program will be carried out. If it is of course the police will do the best they can.

"Observers of the progress of the strike will agree that where there have been policemen in uniform with a wagon there has been no trouble. The posted placards of the injunction of the federal court have, however, not had the expected effect.

"I am confident of the ability of the police to keep the peace, but a policeman cannot be in more than one place at a time. I do not want more than one man to a wagon, but I ought to have that many.

No Need for Troops.

"I expect to have at least 500 more men. Every extra man on the force has been put into service, even the lockup-keepers have been drafted, and where there were formerly three desk sergeants at a station there are now only two. The mayor has lost his policeman, and Jim Donahue is now doing patrol work.

"I will promise that if I am not interfered with there will be no need for federal troops in Chicago. The employers, however, must act in a reasonable and sensible manner."

Fearing the result of arming non-union teamsters with rifles as was proposed, Chief O'Neill called in Attorney Sincere of the Employers' Teaming Company and requested moderation. Mr. Sincere promised that no rifles would be given out.

Arms for Non-Union Men.

Arms openly displayed on wagons were seen during the day, however, and proved effective in keeping riotously inclined persons at a distance. Frank E. Scott sent out five wagons, on each of them there was a non-union teamster with a shotgun between his knees. The wagons were unprotected either by injunction or by police, but passed unmolested all day through crowds of strikers.

"The display of the gun on each wagon seems to be protection enough," said Mr. Scott. "There was no trouble and I shall have more wagons running in the same way."

Teaming Companies Stand Pat.

The executive committee of the Employers' association met at the Union League club and discussed strategic measures. Word was brought to the committee that Arthur Dixon and his fellow employers in the transfer and teaming business refused to accede to the demand and deliver to the boycotted stores. The ultimatum delivered to the five transfer companies was served on half a dozen other members of the Team Owners' association. There followed a meeting of the transfer men and a decision to defy the threat that they would lose their railroad business.

The report of this decision caused a stir in the meeting at the Union League. A dozen merchants offered on the spot to withdraw their cartage business from the teaming companies.

Mark Morton also started out to divert railroad teaming from the concerns. He went to the office of the Employers' Teaming company and made arrangements to give the company a part of the freight business of two railroads which is now divided among half a dozen of the teaming companies.

Would Get Used to It.

John Hanan told this story at a recent dinner of the Stoe Manufacturers' association about one of the employes in his factory:

Mr. Hanan had become convinced that the lasters in the factory could turn out more and better work if they stood up at their benches than if they sat. He introduced this system. Most of the younger hands took kindly to it and were well satisfied with the change. The older men found it hard to break up the habit of a lifetime, but even they were won over gradually until there was but one grumbler left. This man entered an appeal.

"Misther Hanan," said he, stopping his employer in the shop, "I've worked fer you fer twenty year. All that time I've sat at me binch as I worked. It's sorry I am to be the only one to be unable to adjoost meself to th' new order, but I can't get used to it. I've thried an' thried, but it's no use. Now, Misther Hanan, couldn't ye grant the one favor to an old hand an' let me sit down till I get used to standin' up? It's sure I am that in a short time I'd be all right."—New York Sun.
