Society Scandal.

So far as concerns decent and proper social information the daily newspaper of today fully treats the subject, and, in fact, exhausts the supply. There is no legitimate field for the strictly "society" organ in this sphere, and the result is the scandal which would take to live on social patronage must plunge into the scandal and gossip which the unbelievable pieces its pects.

With the development of daily newspaper enterprise the distinctively "society" paper has in many cases fallen into disrepute, even and women who value their reputation do not care to be seen reading it. The circle whose doings and scandals it reports another but a few hundred in the great cities and all over the country only a few thousand. But the paper which devotes itself to social scandal has a wide field for its industry. There are hundreds in most large and wealthy families the publication of which would be unwelcome to honorable parties involved and equally pleasing to their enemies and envious neighbors. Upon the vanity, envy and timidity of the few the "society" editor plays to his profit, printing what that decent newspaper men turn from the sanctum door every day.

Scorn for the claim that football makes lovely citizens reached its ebb just in this passage in a speech to the Alumni of the University of Pennsylvania by Dr. R. Weir Mitchell: "Also for the generation which ventured into the war of cities without the bracing of modern athletics' let us reflect with sorrow on how much more splendid might have been Sound Money or the fight at the Bloody Angle or at the bridge at Antietam if Lee and Grant had played football."

Once again the Spanish American fracas is made to parallel the great civil conflict. It has produced a school book war. The author of a new United States school history omitted the incident of dewey's having swimming the Bagbag and excuses the unsatisfactory description by saying that he investigated the matter and found that the testimony of eyewitnesses and official war department records that Funston crossed the Bagbag on a bridge.

Here's another story illustrative of Ben Franklin's foresight and philosophical reach of mind. Some one said of his drawing the electricity from a cloud with the kite, "But what is the use of it?" Franklin replied, "What is the use of a baby?"

It is a decided compliment that the peace societies of Italy pay to George Washington in that movement to make the birthday of the Father of His Country a holiday the world over for manifestations in favor of peace.

It would be discouraging for the grand future of a budding American admiral to have him dismissed from the Naval academy for boxing. There will be no warm welcome at home for that sort of prodigal.

240 TRAINS DAILY.

North-Western Road to Increase Depot Facilities at Chicago.

The 30,000 suburbanites who use the Northwestern railroad will be pleased to learn that, within a month the delays that sometimes occur in entering and leaving the Wells street station will be done away with.

This will be the result of an expenditure of more than $1,000,000 by the Northwestern to increase its passenger station facilities. Probably no railroad in the country is burdened with such an operating problem as the Northwestern has had. It is compelled to get a total of 240 trains in and out of the station and over a drawbridge with which the Chicago river levels are the work of a hustle of which the station grounds are the body. The company has installed a $25,000 interlocking plant at Ohio street, which will make it possible to move as many trains over two tracks as could be moved over four without the new system.

At an expense of $250,000 the company purchased eighteen acres of land at Western avenue, where it has equipped the property with a yard with thirty tracks, the latest air, water, gas and electric cleaning devices and a capacity of 400 cars. It has also bought the Peabody tract of eight acres on the east side of the river and is preparing it for use for relaying suburban engines. This latter scheme will cost $100,000, but its completion will greatly lessen the movements over the bridge. Of the 240 daily trains in and out of the station, 180 are suburban and utility through. A total of 40,000 people pass in and out of the station every day, or 25 per cent within three years. The total business done in 1905 at the 332 places of baggage were handled, weighed, 7,000,000 pounds, an indication of the amount of business done at that terminal.

A Healing Gospel.

The Rev. J. C. Wooten, pastor of Shuford Memorial Church, Rocky Mount, says of Electric Bitters: "It's a God-send to suffering humanity. Used and sold back stiff joints and complete physical collapse. I have been down sick for half an hour to walk a mile. Two bottles of Electric Bitters made me feel no so strong I have just walked three miles in 35 minutes and feel like going three more. It's made a new man of me." Greatest remedy for weak nerves and all Stomach Liver and Kidney complaints. Only 50c a bottle. Sold at Barrington Pharmacy. Price 50c.

TO HURRY THINGS ALONG.

A Double Venire Ordered in Lake County Court for March Term.

Judge Charles H. Donnelly is planning an extraordinary session of the March term of Lake county court. He hopes to and place on docket in the "old stuff" out of the way, and to this end has ordered a double venire. Court Clerk Buckway to issue a double venire for the March term of court. This means that seventy-two men will be called to serve on the jury instead of thirty-six as ordinary. This procedure is unusual and special, shows that the judge will hurry things along as much as he can. Wednesday His hope is to clean up the old docket and get all of the cases that are ready for fire for some time, out of the way for new business to come in and not be dragged along and put off from time to time with the old. Should the docket accumulated until the court has taken this action to get them out of the way.

A RING IN THE DARK

By FRANK HARRIS

Copyright, 1905, by P. C. Eastwood

Meager as was Jenny's salary, one half of it was paid for the tiny room on Mrs. Cady's third floor and furnished Jenny's inadequate supply of food and clothing, and the other half until the last two months had gone regularly to her mother on the little unproductive Rhode Island farm.

But these last two months had made a new division in the attempt. Now it was in three parts, and the third went to the fourth floor of Mrs. Cady's apartment house to a certain Herbert Ingle and here than her own. She had heard a fine sounding one day, appearing from the room above, and had gone up and tapped cautiously on the door. Several minutes had passed before she heard a feeble step across the floor, and then the door had opened, and she had looked into the sad eyes of a most refined old face she had ever seen, but, oh, so wan and patient and hopeless!

"Are you following me?" she demanded.

"Why, yes; I say as well acknowledge it here than anywhere else," she answered, "but it's all right. You must come along with me, please. The police mustn't know," at the incredulity and horror in her face, "I'll explain later.

"But what for?" indignantly.

"Oh, just for the ring on your finger," easily, "though of course you know. It's been in the papers the last ten days—only ring like it in the country, big reward and all that. What worries me, though, is you being so stupid as to put it on openly. We were all on the lookout for anybody this morning that a ring something like mine answered to be in her finger, but from what sh—said we had an idea it was worn by an old woman. I've been on the watch several hours. Now you know. I've been in the papers, and we can walk quietly and nobody will notice."

Jenny's head was in a whirl. The ring was evidently stolen, but she did not for a moment think of the old woman as a thief, and yet she claimed to be her mother. "It's a ring given me by a young girl.

"There's some mistake," she faltered.

"Of course there is," cheerfully, "and I'll help you to put it right for you for convenience. But you'll have to go and explain to the judge and to the owner of the ring. Come, I'm telephoned for. You can do that easily enough." And he took Jenny's hand unceremoniously.

When the owner came he proved to be a young man, full of spirits, who brought a quick flush to Jenny's face. He was the owner of the man for whom she worked.

"What's You?" he exclaimed, then to the officer: "You have made a mistake. This young lady—"

"Excuse me," he interrupted the officer incredulously. "Look at her finger."

"I don't care," vehemently. "She isn't the one." He glanced at the ring on Jenny's finger, and an odd look came to his face, as if he were trying to bring up it to the least like mine—not in the least."

"Exactly like your description," dryly, "and I believe your advertisement added that the ring on the finger Never was inside. Suppose we look and see—"

"Oh, I'll look," with a wry smile while The ring is entirely different."

But Jenny was slipping the ring from her finger hurriedly

"Here, Heloise," but Eloise inside," she cried.

"What?" The young man took the ring and looked at it in his hand fruitfully

"It must be Aunt Heloise," he said at last in a sad voice. "Grandfather gave a ring like that to her daughter, but Aunt Heloise was lost or supposed to be lost at sea. She went down in midsummer twenty years ago."

"Your Aunt Heloise is alive in an old woman in Mrs. Cady's apartment," Jenny, for at least I saw the same ring there. I thought it belonged to her owner gave me this ring."

"Then," the officer, "I guess we might better withdraw to the next."
