THE BARRINGTON REVIEW.

VOL. 22. NO. 2. BARRINGTON, ILLINOIS, FRIDAY, MARCH 2, 1906. $1.50 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.

IT WAS A GRAND SUCCESS

Royal Neighbors' Masquerade Ball Was Well Attended and the Society's Coffers Were Replenished.

The ladies composing the order of Royal Neighbors entertained at a masquerade ball given in the Village Hall Tuesday evening, which was one of the most enjoyable social affairs taking place in Barrington for many years past. A great many visitors from out-of-town were present to enjoy the many feast and comfort consumes worn by the dancers, and to enjoy the identity of the masked persons. The music was furnished by William Hill and son, Wallace, and E. Dunstack, and was highly enjoyed. The ladies also furnished an elaborate supper, which was well patronized. The success achieved was well deserved, as those having the arrangements in charge worked hard for the good cause of replenishing the coffers of one of the best organizations in existence to-day.

Woman's Club Contains Many Singers.

A song recital was arranged for the program of the Woman's Club on Thursday of May 24. It will be an interesting paper on "Our American Song Writers." Miss Mary Wells Welsh, and songs written by American authors were rendered by vocalists of the club. The club feels very proud of the number of singers in its number and especially of those whose willingly give their services next time and in the club's chorus work. This will be a song recital, very rapidly and the music is always an enjoyable feature of the program. On next Thursday the Study Club will be observed at the home of Mrs. Leroy Pooges. Mrs. Addie Lines being hostess. The entire program will be given by the daughters of club members.

An Unconscious Impression.

Some times the question comes up of the extent of editorial privilege in changing the text of letters sent to newspapers for publication either under the writers real name or pseudonymous. Correspondents at times times roused to indignation because their matter is cut out, and say that the matter left out was the best or most apt part of the communication.

If such letters are printed anyways were printed exactly as they are written no one would be more grieved than the writers. Errors in spelling, syntax and grammar are common even in the professional press and correctors either themselves well educated, and of course these mistakes must be corrected. "Grammar Blunders" and many other contributors to newspapers have not the editor's sense of responsibility.

The limitations of space must be considered. The art of compact writing is not always found in the letters of persons who suggest cuts and options now may have a distinct public value.

When the order is to boil everything down goes out; letters of the editor are not exempted.

An inestimably managed news paper will not cut out of a community entire matter that happens not to be to accommodate the writer, but the broad gauge paper is a free patronage for the expression of all matters of public interest.

Politeness, fairness and decency are the guides of a conscientious editor who, though he may change a correspondent's language for various reasons, will not do violence to his ideas.
