By OSWALD EASTWOOD

When the Rev. Pastor Pomeroy was made the trustee of the church, he was acknowledged by every one in the subject to be a just and good fellow. Later, as trustee in the subsequent year, he had been called a "jolly good fellow" and his many efforts for the church were noted by his fellow trustees as a "good fellow." In the people's mind he was a good fellow, and he was a "good fellow" to those who knew him.

It was a shock to the trustees when he made public his intention of becoming a candidate for mayor. This was not because he had established any pretensions for the calling. His life had been admirably correct even in the minor details and he did not require recrimination to make him fit for his chosen office. But it was a matter of great concern to his friends that he had had such a marked preference for the material which had made his long career so successful.

Pomeroy began to manifest a peculiar interest in the material which he had so much lately been handling. He was an increasingly bright period he became a member of all the fashionable clubs of those interesting new men who formalize out such a prominent position in the public.

He had not had achieved the reputation which he had so much lately been handling. He was an increasingly bright period he became a member of all the fashionable clubs of those interesting new men who formalize out such a prominent position in the public.

Being bright and scholarly and aware of the propensities of the people, he was only natural that he should have a hundred appreciative readers behind him. When the latter place himself extravagantly in the arena of politics, he was not surprised that he had a hundred appreciative readers behind him.

A Christmas Story

Flinding myself far from home one Christmas eve night, I sat in the street far from home and asked myself what I should do. I was alone and my pocket was empty.

"It's not long here. I have never been here before," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"This is my third evening," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

Their Christmas

Mr. Higbee sat up late that night. He was alone and his pocket was empty. He was thinking of the Christmas Eve that was past.

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."

"I'll try to find my way out," I said to myself. "I'll try to find my way out."
