HE STARTED AN EPIDEMIC

Prominent Banker Made Operation Fashionable and Many Developed Same Affection.

"Funny writers in the papers," said a well-known eye specialist from the south the other day, "like to make jokes about fashionable diseases. There's a good deal more truth in them than they think, and we doctors don't always welcome the latest style.

"Last summer I had to perform an operation for an abscess in the mastoid process of a well-known banker down my way. He was a prominent man, and the newspapers gave him and his case a good deal of attention. In the next fortnight I had no less than ten other people come to me for the same operation, and, as it is about as severe-reaching a job as I get in our line, I was not any too pleased.

"Were they necessary? Well, I would not have performed them if they had not been, but I suspect seven of the patients would have either died or got out of chancery if they had not read about the big man's condition. At any rate, the mention of my name in connection with the case was an advertisement for me, and people think that the banker came to me they had better do the same, but, take it from me, it's a mistake, quite certain that if I had operated in the little room at the bank (that instead of a bank president. I should never have had such a run of cases immediately on top of each other, and I don't want another such rush, I can tell you."

Mark Twain Got Tired.

Next to a fight like the late Mark Twain was fond of a game of billiards and before the beginning of the decades that ended his death he was able to play an excellent game. As a beginner, however, he declined to himself lucky to run out a string of 50 at strikingly long intervals of an hour.

It was at this stage of his progress in the game that he was once accosted by a stranger at a public billiard room.

"Shall we play?" asked the stranger.

Twain agreed, and they decided on a game of 100 points at a dollar each. The stranger won the bank and began shooting, and run ten and over. Twain left the side of the table and took a chair. The stranger continued. Twenty, 30, 40 points, and still he collected the balls where he would and clicked off the points. At last Twain replaced his cue in the rack and leaned back in a chair of resignation, while the stranger ran out the game without a miss in the hundred-a single shot.

The stranger then spotted up the balls and said:

"Well, go ahead; I'll give you the first shot this time."

Twain arranged his arms, manufactured a yawn and replied:

"No, I think I'll quit; I'm all tired out."

The Brighter Side.

One of the easiest things in the world is to form habit of grumbling. The occasional discontent at one's lot can develop into chronic pessimism, a state of mind that sheds gloom around and ultimately overshadows the natural brightness of every normal, healthy being.

There's an old saying that puts the matter in a nutshell: "Count your many what you like, like what you have." Try to see the silver lining that is there beneath the surface of your lot, but in the effort to unearth it there will be developed a cheerfulness strength to withstand the harder knocks of the world.

The grumbler is the most unwelcome person. He is in a constant state of displeasure and never seems to be general and with himself in particular; it is a repulsive habit. Many of us envy or covet, and one that, if care be not used in the daily attitude toward life, will grow upon us until we are the slaves of a disagreeable habit.

When Memories Met.

Lord Li, ambassador of the Chinese imperial military commission, was at West Point the other day with Prince Tsai Tao, when he encountered one of the veteran attaches of the post, who shook him by the hand.

"I remember quite well, indeed," said the Chinese nobleman, "for when I was here with my father, Li Hung Chang, you asked me where my father was, and what did I say?"

"Your excellency replied," the functionary said, "that your father was afraid of catching cold, and that he would not come ashore."

It happened that when the Chinese statesman was brought up the Hudson on the Dolphin, in 1896, the day was forbidding and chilly, and he decided that he would remain where he was and sent the rest of his party ashore, including the youthful Lord Li,who was then accompanying him.

Civic Pride.

"I propose to hurl myself from you skiff."

"You insist on suicide?"

"I do."

"Well, you skyscraper is just as high. Hurl yourself from it and help advertise our town.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Afflictions to Match.

"That pork dealer has a most appropriate affliction just now."

"What is it?"

"A sty in his eye."

MAKING PIE CRUST DIFFICULT

Few Women Seem to Know How to Prepare This Essential to Happiness.

Who has not beheld that most pathetic of all things, the bride, attempting to make her first pie crust? Usually the most difficult culinary stunt in the first six inexperienced woman attempts, and she toils over it with awful results. Either she keeps adding more and more flour so it will not cling to the rolling pin, and the end the crust that should be flaky is of the consistency of a board and can hardly be cut with the knife.

Or, perhaps she others attempting pastry the first rule is never to make it in a warm room, and the kitchen board is a marble slab. This is much better than a wooden board, and the dough will not stick so readily to it. The board should be on the window the paste is mixed must also be thoroughly chilled with cold water. The butter used should be selected or twice the salt mashed out of it. It should then be put in the ice box and thoroughly chilled.

To a scant half pound of pastry flour add one teaspoonful of salt and the same quantity of baking powder. This should be well worked together with the tips of the fingers only, as the hand is too warm, and the mixture be kept in motion.

Add gradually three-fourths of a cupful of cold water, mixing it into a paste. The paste should be soft, but not so that it clings to the rolling pin.

Dust the board lightly and knead the paste until it is smooth and free from lumps. Do this as quickly as possible, for the longer you knead it the tougher it makes the flakes when baked.

Let the paste stand for five minutes, covered with a bowl in a cool spot, then roll out into an oblong sheet one half inch thick. Spread with one-half pound of butter, which has been rolled to a thick paste, and cut at any time. Immediately put it away to chill. The butter should not be allowed to be seen outside of its dough covering, or it will melt and run out and it immediately with flour When rolled finally it should be one-half an inch thick.

Macaroon Pudding.

Soak six macaroons in one-half cup of milk or cream. Beat the yolks of three eggs with one tablespoonful of sugar, a little salt and the macaroons. Beat well to make it smooth and cook about twenty minutes. Then add the juice of one and a little vanilla. Butter a pudding dish, sprinkle sugar over the bottom and sides, turn in the pudding and sprinkle sugar in the top. Cover and set where it will cool gradually. Serve very cold. The sugar will make a sauce or you may use oranges also when you serve the pudding.

Icing.

To make the icing put into a granite saucepan one cupful sugar and one-half cup water. Stir until dissolved, without stirring or shaking, until bubbles commence to rise from the bottom. This will take about five minutes. Heed the caution not to stir after the first froth, and pour the hot syrup onto then in a fine stream, beating the mixture all the time Continue to beat until the icing is white and creamy in flavor with vanilla Use all of this for the icing or put two-thirds between the layers of cake and the rest on top of the cake.

To make the chocolate, shave fine into a cup and set in a pan placed over the boiling water.

Berry Portiers for Summer.

The taged portiers is a new idea in summer furnishings Tapestry bands in a variety of color combinations are arranged alternately with groups of velour plush. The plush may be one color, predominating so the drapery may be chosen to harmonize with the other furnishings in the room.

One set of portiers will answer for two rooms, as the bands are alike on both sides. They are made in two drapery sits to seven feet wide, and seven feet six inches in the longest cord reaching to the ground.

Spiced Rhubarb.

Sprinkle 2½ pounds of sliced rhubarb with one pound of sugar and let stand over night. Drain in the morning and add to the juice one cupful of water, one cupful of sugar, and one-half cupful of vinegar, spices to taste, to boil with a spice bag containing one-half ounce each of stick cinnamon, mace, allspice, ginger and cinnamon. Boil until it forms a slow syrup, then add rhubarb and boil until thick.

Apple Puff Pudding.

Peel, core and fill with sugar, six large or eight small apples. Bake slowly and roast in serving dish. Beat whites of six eggs to a stiff froth, add of tartar, and three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. Pile on top of the apples in each apple and brown in the oven. Serve with cream and the juice of the pulp. Half this recipe is enough for a small family.

When Her Faith in the Lord Failed.

During the progress of a "protracted meeting," for which the south a famous, an elder sister of the church, who usually came in an old-fashioned buckboard drawn by the family horse, was late for a particular important service, and was being severely censured by the pastor.

Explaining the delay, and casting into the good steter said that the horse had taken fright at a passing train and bolted and that the wreck of the buggy had prevented her coming sooner.

"My dear sister, such little things should not make you late for divine services. You should trust in the Lord."

"Well, brother," she replied, and there was a look of calm peacefulness on her face, "I did trust in the Lord till the buckboard broke down and had to jump."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Description of a Mountain.

"Jimmy," said the teacher, "what is a cape?"

"A cape is land extending into the water."

"Correct, William, define a gulf."

"A gulf is water extending into the land."

"Good. Christopher," to a small, sugar-looking boy, "what is a mountain?"

Christopher shot up from his seat so eagerly that he fell into the aisle, and promptly responded: "A mountain is land entirely surrounded by water."

Her Excuse.

"Why—er—yes," Miss Goodley admitted, blushing a little as she met the gaze of the teacher, "I was reading the minister I was only twenty-two."

"Oh, I'm surprised!" exclaimed Miss Geddes, "and in the Sunday school teacher, too!"

"But," said Goodley protested, "the minister has told us it's always better to understate a thing than to exaggerate."

Her Laugh Broke.

She was a little fond of seven, with eyes like diamonds and hair like spun gold, and she was romping with a half dozen playmates. Touching a fine-looking youngster on the shoulder she challenged him with, "You can't catch me." Off they started, she trailing and dodging with the dexterity of a half-back on a football team, and in following her every movement in close pursuit. The excitement of the chase made her scream with laughter. The little fellow finally made a stop against a fence, breathless and panting, and her pursuer, throwing his arms about her, shouted: "There, I've caught you!" "Oh, no," gasped the little fairy, "but it was 'cause my laugh broke and I couldn't run any more."
