PREVENTING DISEASE IN CATTLE REQUIRES LABOR

However, It Is Both Humane and Profitable—Two Great Scourges in Calf Bearing Are White Scour and Lung Affection.

(By W. B. KILBERT.) The two great scourges in calf bearing are the white scour and the lung affection, which latter has been proved to be quite preventable. The method requires extreme but not laborious care in carrying out. When this care is taken satisfactory results are obtained.

Investigation has proved, first, that the disease is located in districts; and second, that it is more prevalent where sanitary conditions are not perfect; third, that the disease is contracted through allowing the infectious material of the place when the calf is dropped to come into contact with the navel of the young calf, through which it finds its way into the circulation of the blood.

The remedy is to have the place for the calf dropped, disinfected and as soon as the calf comes into the world to dress the navel with a proper known almost with certainty to apply. There are districts where this scourge is unknown. Let a diseased calf be brought in and the disease at once appears.

All houses in which young calves are reared should be made thoroughly clean; a large application of disinfectants should be made until the place is made free, and all calves should be liberally supplied with clean, dry straw for bedding.

Another disease appears to be a form of contagious bronchitis. It is generally fatal if it is allowed to run unchecked for some time.

It is possible that this very serious disease can be caused by allowing calves to remain out in the fields too long in cold, wet weather.

Provide good, comfortable quarters for calves while they are young. Let them have sufficient ventilation in their houses without drafts. Allow them open air exercise only on warm Contentment in Hot Weather. Does and not until they are sufficiently strong to withstand even moderately cold weather. Never allow a young calf to have the coat saturated with cold rain water. The principal matter to be borne in mind is that all young animals taken from their natural conditions of life and living must have thoughtful care, and it should not be necessary to observe that in the management of calves we are dealing with a valuable farm asset that will require considerable care.
