

VICTORIA'S FUNERAL PROCESSION.

THE FUNERAL PROCESSION, AT WESTMINSTER, LONDON, KING EDWARD VII.

FUNERAL RITES OF KING EDWARD VII.

London, King.—The funeral of King Edward VII. is declared to have been the most imposing ceremonial observed in the history of the British empire since the death of Queen Victoria. The funeral rites were held at Westminster hall in the presence of the king's body, which was placed in a leaden coffin and carried to the altar of the choir. The king's body was placed in a leaden coffin and carried to the altar of the choir. The king's body was placed in a leaden coffin and carried to the altar of the choir.

regalia and King Edward's full marshall's sword remained in Windsor the day before the funeral. The archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by Canon Willmore, conducted a short service at Westminster hall on the arrival of the body on May 17. The members of both houses of parliament attended the service.

Queen Mother Grief Heavens.
The hymns sung at the service at Windsor were all of the queen mother's choice. They were "My God, My Father, While I Breathe," "God the Father's Task Is Ours," and "I Hear'd a Voice From Heaven."

King's Consideration for Consort.
For years they had been to quote an informant of the "best of pals," and with the inclusion in the list published in the papers of a house party at Sandringham of a certain woman's name, it was generally understood that the king had met the lady in a certain way.

No Distinction Shown.
There was no distinction shown to any person nor were there any ticket privileges for the lying in state. All had to take their turn in line.

King Edward VII.
The body of King Edward lies with that of his immediate ancestor in the magnificent mausoleum at Frogmore, in the Home park of Windsor castle. The coffin, which cost £1,000,000, was made in 1861. In the same year Queen Victoria was laid to rest in the same tomb. The king's body was laid to rest in the same tomb. The king's body was laid to rest in the same tomb.

King's Mother's Grief Deep.
The excessive delight in the recovery of King Edward's body from the bedroom where he died to the throne room at Sandringham, was shared by Queen Alexandra to the extent of allowing the body to be removed to the mausoleum of her own apartments.
