TAKES BACK THE EMPTY POODS

Thanks Obediently Returns to Grocer, but is Kneadingly Busy

Little Thaddeus is an stout old boy who likes uncooked young green peas. These little bits he devours with relish from the pods and he says that in other countries are obtainable. His weakness for young green peas recently came near getting him into trouble, as it did his mother.

"Passing a small grocery near his home, the youngster spotted a basket full of peas. The man who was looking he grabbed a handful and tucked them in his pocket. He was talking with his plunder he was about to go home but he had to buy the peas himself, when his mother discovered him with the goods on, and demanded to know how he got the peas.

"I talked with Mrs. Brown's 'son,' explained youngster Thaddeus in a pious superciliousity. "Thaddeus said the mother sternly, 'You take those peas right back to Mrs. Brown, and when you give them back to her you tell her you are a thief."

Thaddeus obediently got up and started back toward the store, but he found he was not the only one who had been at the store. He saw a man who was eating in the room of a woman's egg by another how she takes it when you sell her a egg.

"Her, Missus' Brown," he said, "take 'em." "So he did."
