SYNOPSIS.

The story is told by Nicholas. The scene is set in the United States...

"There lacks one thing—the bride. What do you mean?" He put out his hand...

"I looked at him, my eyes starting wide. I could not believe what he said."

"Why? I began. 'How utterly monstrous!'"

"That, all in one, I did recollect! I did remember that I had mentioned the name of the barones that very morning to Elizabeth, when the barones passed on to her apartment..."

"What Elizabeth said to me fitted me like a glove. It was the slipper of the barones Helens von Pitt—white, delicate, hair-ornament."

"I was so sure, there has been a mistake, a horrible mistake! I trembled."

Dr. Halford, in his grave and quiet way, answered Nicholas. "I am afraid, I can't know both families. I am sure, much against my will, had there been no objection upon either side..."

"I told some one at my quarters yesterday of my plan, but arranged for the railway station for that evening's train..."

"I sprang into his carriage and caught him roughly by the arm. I felt to his pocket and looked into the carriage floor, on the seat, and pulled to the door..."

"Did you see the barones?" I asked, then. "Did she beamed upon you with a wide smile?"

"Did I see it with my gratified puller?" I asked. "Did she beamed upon you with a wide smile?"

"The sudden awe broke out upon my forehead. 'Tell me, what have you seen with your eyes?'"

"'What do you mean?' I asked. 'The sudden awe broke out upon my forehead. 'Tell me, what have you seen with your eyes?'"

"'What do you mean?' I asked. 'The sudden awe broke out upon my forehead. 'Tell me, what have you seen with your eyes?'" briefly, I told him what I had known of the arrest of that hour. I told him of the shame and humiliation I felt. He pondered for a minute and asked me at length if I believed in Elizabeth's statement...

"How could she? I answered. 'If so, as I can recollect, I never mentioned the name of the barones von Pitt.'"
