Neither moon, stars nor electric light illumined in Dundee Sunday night. Darkening like a cloud of disaster over the potential village and some of the epitaphs had led to the North Shore company's dark and loss will be great. The cause of this unexpected lack of illumination on the first dark night of the season is not known. Usually the North Shore people thought it was the time of year for the moon to shine, or possibly they thought it a fit time to have an appreciation of a good thing. Possibly the Harrington young men whose business it is to attend to the lighting of Dundee's streets had a "preparing engagement." As it was dark, so dark that streets, walks, trees and people all looked alike and those whose duties took them into the streets walked by faith instead of sight.
