DELAY IN THE SETTLEMENT OF MOROCCO QUESTION BRINGS WAR SCARE.

MANY WILD RUMORS AFLOAT

French Troops Are Massed on German Border

People in Germany to Withdraw Savings From Bank

Paris—The delay in the settlement of the Moroccan question, which is being negotiated in Berlin because of the refusal of the British and German governments to accept a treaty of peace, has brought an unusual feeling of nervousness throughout this country, Germany and Belgium.

The feeling was augmented in Paris by the action of La Prairie in announcing that he was going to effect that France is concentrating a large army in the direction of the border, although to some extent by the statement of the government of Belgium that the movement was solely for the purpose of annual maneuvers.

The sense of uncertainty seems to be gaining the upper hand in Germany, according to a correspondent here, the people of many provinces are withdrawing their savings deposits from the banks, fearing a war.

At the time Belgium is known to be strengthening its force on the border, the government of France has also announced that it is concentrating a large force of troops in the Franco-German club country.

The Paris bureau was affected by a slight degree by the Moroccan question.
