BYNOBIL.

Jack Keith, a Virginian, now a bowler, was in a hotel. He was in a hotel. He was in a hotel. He was in a hotel.

CHAPTER XX—(Continued).

It was growing dark, the outside world, now consisting of level plains, fading into darkness, and a few stars burning overhead. Trueman lit his pipe and sat down in the car against the side of the car, and its occupants became little more than shadows. All by and by the man's eyes closed, and several were asleep. Some small snoring was possible on the cramped seats.
