Women, Famous for Daring Deed
 When But 15 Years Old, Succumbed to Bright's Disease Following Operation for Appendicitis.

Boon, Ia.—Miss Kate Shelly, now a heroine who in 1881 at great personal risk, saved a passenger train from being wrecked by the death of a five-year-old girl at her home near one of her heroic deeds.

Miss Shelly had suffered greatly from Bright's disease, which was followed by an attack of Bright's disease, but she was as brave in the face of death as when she was a young girl.

A bright example of the courage of a fifteen-year-old girl who believed she was saving the lives of hundreds of passengers on a limited train to the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, although later developments proved the number of lives she actually saved was less.

Passengers on the limited at that time were on a purpose for the brave girl and railroad men were urged to help contributions in recognition of her heroism. Appeals of the press to the public for similar contributions failed to bring a heavy response. The Chicago and Northwestern railroad at once called attention to the fact that the limited train had not been endangered and by issuing a statement that Miss Shelly would be amply rewarded.

As a matter of fact, the locomotive had been sent out of the station and the bridge was well and the limited train had not been proceeded beyond Montgomery near the engine house had reported from the next station. But the limited train had not been endangered and by issuing a statement that Miss Shelly would be amply rewarded.
