Addition of nearly 60,000 square feet of floor space to the huge Pontiac motor plant, in preparing for greater volume in the near future, is announced by H. J. Klingler, general manager.

One is a new structure to house a school for plant apprentices; another a new foundry addition to be used mainly for core storage, and the third a separate plant administration building which will also house executive dining and conference rooms.

All three new developments are necessitated by crowding due to
