FARMERS WON'T JOIN LABOR

Anybody who surmises that there can ever be an effective Farmer-Labor party in this country should ask a few farmers how they would feel if confronted with a union demand for higher wages in harvest time, on penalty of letting their crops rot. The American Federation of Labor, imitating the Committee for Industrial Organization, says it is going to organize farm workers on an industrial basis. The farmer may sometimes sympathize with labor, but not at the expense of his own pocketbook. Nobody in the world is quite so pocket-book conscious in his civic reactions as the farmer.

There are some communities where farm labor conditions are oppressive, but this is hardly ever true except in certain sharecropping areas and in those places that have brief seasonal employment, largely in the picking of fruit and vegetables. By and large, farm labor is well treated, in comparison with the standard of living of the farmer himself. The hired man dresses as well as the farmer, maybe better, and eats as well. The farmer will bitterly resent any effort to make him pay more wages. If Messrs. Lewis and Green want the continued subservience of congress and of politicians generally, they had better avoid provoking the farmer by trying to unionize his labor.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN WASHINGTON

(Courtesy The United States News)

Many individuals with net incomes of more than $100,000 were surprised from federal government tax collectors to swear to a statement of their net worth.

The government told them to tell how much cash they had, what yachts, automobiles, homes, their holdings in foreign countries and in personal holding companies.

Nothing like this had occurred since war days. Immediately there were conjured visions of an inquisition. Stories were heard that the Treasury was getting ready to make a levy on capitalists in Italy. Others said that the ghost of Huey Long was back in the form of a new share-the-wealth plan and that in formation was needed so that the government would know where the wealth was located.

There were more plausible suggestions that the government might be getting ready to set up controls over a possible flight of capital from this country, or that it might be seeking information for a foreign government concerning the amount of capital of its nationals that is in hiding here. But to treasury officials the situation was quite simple.

The remember what is now known as the "key-hole investigation" of last summer, during which treasury officials put on display a select group of tax loopholes for the nation to see.

Congress then proceeded to close the loopholes to the best of its ability, but tax collectors then formed the distinct impression that wealthy persons had an advantage over the ordinary run of taxpayers in devising ways to avoid some measure of the payment.

By getting a complete statement of all assets and liabilities of each big taxpayer, and thereby getting a sworn statement of the net worth of each taxpayer, the treasury expects that auditing of returns of the wealthy will be made much easier.

Furthermore, it expects by this process to stamp out or reduce to a minimum the carry-over of the history was in 1852.

Q. What was the fate of the Illinois and Michigan canal after 1852?

A. Tonnage declined from then on to 1914 when commercial navigation practically ceased.

Q. When was the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad company chartered?

A. On Feb. 27, 1847, the Rock Island and La Salle railroad was chartered. On Feb. 7, 1851, the route was extended to Chicago and designated the company by its present name.

Q. What was the nucleus of the Alton railroad?

A. The Alton and Sangamon Railroad company, chartered Feb. 27, 1847, to connect Springfield to Alton.

Q. What was the time of transit in 1854 between Joliet and St. Louis on the Chicago and Mississippi (Alton) railroad?

A. 1 1/4 hours.

Q. How did the Chicago and Mississippi railroad extend into Chicago?

A. In 1854-55 the Illinois Legislature chartered the Joliet-Chicago Railroad company to be an extension of the Chicago and Mississippi, known by this time as the Chicago, Alton, and St. Louis.

Burgos Played Important Role in Spanish History

Burgos, once the capital of Spain, does not rank as one of the major cities of the Iberian peninsula, but it is rich in history and in architectural treasures. Until 1067, when the royal residence was moved to Toledo, the city was the capital of Old Castile. In fact, it is hinted that the crumbling castle above the city is one of the main reasons for the name of Castile, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Even after the transfer of the royal residence, it was still the scene of much royal pomp, splendor and treasury. Several times were crowned there and some were born within its walls. Perhaps Burgos' most notorious son was an American, the Crank, who was reported to decorate his rooms with the heads of his victims.

Columbus, returning from his second expedition to the New World, was welcomed by Ferdinand and Isabella in that palatial residence of the Catholic Kings, the Casa de Godoy. The building spreads its stone front across one side of the Plaza de Libertad.

To Burgos was born El Cid, the national hero of Spain in the struggle to reconquer the country from the Moors. The history of the city, then a magnificent stronghold, tells the scene of his marriage to Ximenes, who is buried with him in the cathedral. One of the town's sons was the child of Don Quixote's return, when all doors were closed by the jealous king's command and the grieving populace had to do their hero-worship directly from their windows.

It means to enter into and remain a member of the Kingdom of God."

Unwritten Law of Indians One of the unwritten laws of the Indians that was rigidly upheld among the tribes was the respect for personal property, says a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. An Indian would not steal from a member of his own tribe, no matter how much he might be tempted by bow, gun or headress. When a redskin in the own territory killed an animal, that could not carry home, he would put his tribal mark on it and hang it in a tree, knowing that it would still be there when he returned. If another member of this tribe came along and saw it, he would not touch it, no matter if he were starving. He would rather starve to death than violate the law of property rights.

Northern Arabian Native Uses Odd Smoking Outfit Judged by European standards the rough-living, scraggy Bedouin Arab of Northern Arabia and Sinai carries a ludicrous smoking outfit, observes a writer in London. He smokes his pipe, called the beeba, exhibits his own craftsman's work or lack of it, the bowl capacious and cylindrical, being carved out of soft Teima stone. To obtain the long stem, he twists a red-hot skewer through a wild fig shoot or oleander twig. Unfortunately, continuous sucking results in its rapid disintegration, and a stock of new stems is an essential standby.

Junior High Cagers Win Over Palatine

The Barrington Junior High school opened its conference basketball season with first and second team victories over its old rival, Palatine last Friday afternoon. The local second team swamped the Palatine lights by a score of 21 to 7. Callow and Gardner costarred with six points apiece. In the first team game, when Palatine was ahead, Ed Dewitt dropped two field goals to put the local out in front. The final score was 16 to 12. Friday's first team lineup: B. J. H. S. 16—

Matches rank in his eyes as a Western boom, obtainable only by stirring some white-faced traveler's compassion. Ordinarily the old Bedouin gets his light by striking desert flint over shards of an obsolete cotton garment. This tinder is prepared by first milling a cotton fragment between two rough stones. Even more primitive is his pouch or kees, fashioned from the skin of a still-born kid. Into this hairy bag he crams ample tobacco for the longest camel trek.

Given even these crude devices, most civilized beings would get a pleasurable smoke, but not with authentic Bedouin tobacco. Grown haphazardly in desert wastes, this "weed" smells to Heaven, but the Bedouin likes it.

Wisdom Camels in America There is some evidence, though not conclusive, that camels once lived wild in America.
