TERRIBLE RESULT OF A MINE EXPLOSION.

Over One Hundred and Ten Miners in Pennsylvania Lose Their Lives by an Explosion of Fire Damp.

pire. Men at the Imperial dock-yards, St. | There Is Not a Soul Left to Tell the Story—Caused by the Ignition of a Miner's Oil Lamp.

> At Scottsdale, Pennsylvania, by an exolosion of fire-damp in the Mammoth shaft of the H. C. Fricke Coke company 110 sturdy miners were ushered into eternity and a number seriously injured. The explosion occurred shortly after 9 o'clock, and it is supposed was the result of the ignition of a miner's oil lamp. The afterdamp, which followed the fire-damp explosion, suffocated nearly every workman. A few men realizing the fearful situation, fell to the ground, thereby preventing the gas striking them. There is not soul left to tell the story. The persons not killed are in such a critical condition that their deaths are momentarily expected. Up to this writing seventy bodies have been recovered, all without a sign of life. The fire which broke out after the explosion was soon extinguished by the immense fans, which were put in operation. The gas has about all been driven from the pit and the work of rescuing the entombed miners

General Manager Lynch of the H. C. Fricke Coke company is on the scene helping to devise means to rescue the perished workmen. His assistance is invaluable, as he has many years' experience in mining operations. The mammoth plant embraces 509 overs, one of the largest plants in the coke region, but it is hard of access. It is situated near the United Works, where an explosion recently destroyed the entire shaft.

The affair has cast a gloom over the entire coke region, and hundreds of miners are flocking to the scene of the disaster offering assistance. The appauling loss of life in the Dunbar disaster is more than overshadowed by the destruction of life in this Mammoth calamity. Language is too weak to describe the scenes at the mines. Herror is piled on horror. The news spread throughout the entire coke region with great rapidity and everybody was awestricken. The coffins have already been ordered from Mount Pleasant undertakers, and it is understood that the Fricke company, the owners of the plant, will bear the expenses of the same. The only man who escaped from the fatal mine was Mine Boss Eaton. Among those killed are John Beverage and J. Boles, formerly of this place. The former resided here for many years and was held in high esteem by everybody. He was a roadman in the shaft. Ex-Mine Inspector Keighly, the superintendent of the fatal shaft, is nearly distracted. It is a singular fact that misfortune seems to have followed him. His experiences in the Hill Farm disaster resulted in his tendering his resignation as mine inspector. Master Workman Peter Wise, ex-Master Workman R. E. Kerfoot, James Mc-Bride, Mike Disman and John R. Byrne, Secretary Parker and James Keegan, all prominent labor leaders have left for Mammoth to render any assistance in their power, financially or otherwise, to the stricken and bereaved families. Every means possible will be resorted to to supply the widowed mothers and their children with the necessaries of life. It is understood that a subscription paper will shortly be circulated to obtain money to support the unfortunate families. Master Workman Peter Wise has addressed the following letter to the miners and cokers of the region: -To the Mem-SCOTTSDALE, Pa', bers of the Knights of Labor and Workingmen of the Coke Region: The sad news of the disastrous explosion at Mammoth mines has just reached me, and I fear many fami ies have been left destitute. I therefore appeal to you to promptly render what aid you can to assist the families of your brethren who have been killed. The Master Workman and committees at each works will kindly take the matter in hand and act as a relief committee Let the committee select a 'check member," and each miner run as many wagons as he can under the circumstances contribute, and arrangements will be made with the companies to pay the amount, and thus prompt aid can be given. Drawers can adopt the same plan, and day men can contribute from their day's work and have the same deducted in the office. This aid will be separate and apart from any public contributions and will be forwarded to district officers, who will apply it to the relief of those for whom it is

The Republican Senators were completely taken by surprise by the action of the Senate in laying aside the closure resolution and taking up the apportionment bill. There was no expectation on their part that any important vote would be reached, and at least one Republican Senator who was in the city was told that he might safely leave the capitol to attend to some department business. Consequently he was not present when the decisive vote was taken, and It was with difficulty that a pair could be arranged for him. Senator Stanford is the only Republican recorded as absent and unpaired. His vote for the motion to table Senator Wolcott's motion to take up the apportionment bill would have defeated the motion, as the resulting tie would have called forth the casting vote of the Vice-President, without doubt in favor of the continued consideration of the closure rule. The same result would have followed the arrangement of a pair by Senator Stanord with a Democratic Senator.

WILL NOT TAKE AMERICAN PORK The Motion to Repeal the Prohibition Defeated in the Reichstag.

Berlin cablegram: In the renewed de bate in the Reichstag which preceded the vote on the motion made by Herr Barth for the repeal of the American pork prohibition Dr. Windthorst said he regarded the prohibtiion as a sanitary measure, but otherwise he would uphold the motion for repeal in order to lower prices of meat. Von Boetticher followed, referring to what he considered the evil results of the government opening the Russian frontier of Germany to pork imports.

Dr. von Boetticher again rose and declared that the government had not waited for the expression of discontent of the people, but had been continually occupied with the particular question at issue. A recent case of trichiniasis at Cologne, he said, was attributed to the use of American pork which had been smuggled in from Holland. The vote was then taken and the motion defeated-133 to 103.

INTERESTING REMINISCENCES OF A TIME "BEFO' THE WAH."

When it Was Only Necessary to Suggest It in Order to Have Any Known Variety of Fight on Hand.

was coming up the Mississippi river on a slow but magnificent boat, and was sitting on the hurricane deck looking over a beautiful and seemingly endless spread of sugarcane land, when some one standing near me remarked: "You were never along here in the sure-enough days of steamboating, I reckon."

I looked up and saw a tall man, to whose appearance coming age had lent a sort of distinction. His clothes sat upon him with an air of genial disarrangement, and his eyes, I noticed, were moist with the dew of recollection as he gazed far away over the fields. It took me but a second thus to estimate him, and my answer to his question was prompt:

"I was never along here in the old days."

"Oh, well, then, you don't know anything about it. You only catch now a poor shadow of what was once a glorious substance." He seated himself beside me, relighted his cigar, which had gone out, and thus continued:

"A man that was never along here before the war non't know anything about life. In those days the boats were palaces, and man in general was so accommodating and polite that he'd fight you in a minute. Now the boats are flutter-mills, and man, instead of being gentlemanly and accommodating, will curse you, suh. I own a plantation up the river, but it don't amount to anything now.

"Is the land worn out?" I asked. "Oh, no; land's just as good as ever. but the conditions that made life there enjoyable have all been changed. Why, suh, I knocked a fellow down the other day and hanged if he didn't sue me for breach of trust."

"For what," I exclaimed. "For breach of trust, I tell you. He

The fellow stated that he had trusted me or he shouldn't have been hit-said that if he hadn't trusted me he would have dodged In time-and he therefore thought that I should be dealt with for breach of trust. The yaller jeans justice said he thought so, too, and hanged if he didn't fine me

"Why didn't you appeal the case?" I asked.

'Oh, well, you see, I'm not in the law business. I just horsewhipped the justice till the dust flashed out of the yaller jeans and then I let the affair drop. I tell you," he added, after a brief pause, "we used to have great times along here in the old gentleman days. I remember one evening a sort of preacher came aboard at a landing just about here. He was a simple man, with a meek smile that seemed to have been mortised into his face. I soon got acquainted with him and learned that, aside from being a preacher, he operated a plantation and had some little money.

"Among the passengers was one of the shrewdest gamblers I had ever known, and when he found out that the preacher had money he began to lay plans for catching him. I went to the preacher and told him. That's all right, said be. 'In this life it is but natural that the wolves should be after the sheep.' 'Of course you will not play with him,' said I. 'Oh, I don't know,' he answered. 'I have worked very hard and am off for a rest, and if he can aid me in getting what I seek, all right. Some of the greatest of English clergymen, you and although I am not a great clergy. man, yet I am an Englishman and am game for any sort of innocent amusement that may be flushed up. 'But that man Nickerson,' said I, referring to the sbrewd gambler, 'will beat' you.' Oh, possibly,' the clergyman rejoined, 'but he can't but me out of much, Perhaps I might win from him. Don't think that I am an easy victim, my dear sir. I have had a great deal of experience, and am not so very easily picked up.'

"he didn't dodge that gambler at all, but actually sat down to a game of poker with him. Of course the preacher lost, but he was shrewd enough not to bet very high. The minister came up to me with his smile mortised in a little deeper and said: 'Well, he is pretty sharp and I lost $100; but how are we to preach against an evil unless we know the ways

I am fond of playing cards and if should create any other impression I should be a hypercrite, and a hypercrite is worse than a gambler. Do you wish to play a game?" I played, and away late that night when the preacher got off at Campbell's Bend he carried 2,000 of my dollars with him. I don't know that he ever saw a pulpit, for I found out afterward that he and that fellow Nickerson were partners. Oh, yes, those were great days when people were gentle and polite. Why, if a man had to kill a dog then he did it in an easy and gentlemanly way. A spirit of etiquet seemed to pervade the atmosphere.

But now, I warrant that if you should get into a quarrel with some man on board this boat he would be brutal enough to haul off and knock you down with his fist. There must come a change, though, sooner or later. Society can't stand the uncouthness of the present era. The customs that came in after the war robbed us of our good breeding. When every man carried a pistol for the purpose of inducing his neighbor to be polite every gentleman was genial. Rudeness, that unsightly fungus growth on the trunk of careless society, meant crude correction or polished death. Am I boring you, suh?"

"Far from it," I answered.

The boat landed. 'This is a well-remembered spot with me," said the planter. "One night in the spring of 1859 I seated myself in a poker game just as the boat left this landing. From the very start luck was in my favor, and it didn't seem that I could lose. First one and then another of our party dropped out until at last I sat facing old Maj. Pelton. I soon had him broke. 'Look here,' said he, 'I'm not going to jump this game. I will put up my body ser-vant, be gad, suh. Come here, Bill.' Bill came up, and a husky fellow he was. too. Well, I won him, and the old major went to bed, swearing. 'Bill,' said I, 'who's your master now?' 'You is, sah,' said he. 'Correct you are, Bill. Black my boots,'

"Well, suh," the planter continued, "I kept Bill right with me, although I rascals I ever saw. One day, just about the time Grant was marching into Vicksburg and while I was marching in an opposite direction about as fast as I could. Bill came up to me and said:

"Mars John, I've dun got enough!"

I got into a sort of squabble with the government and was told to go down to Keesport to see the United States land commissioner. I had had some correspondence with the office and, from the tone of the letters received, I did not expect that my treatment would be any too courteous. When I got there I was shown into a room and told to await the plessure of the commissioner. Presently a voice said: 'This is the commissioner, sah.' I look up and there stood Bill-my Bill. I didn't know

"Good mawnin', said I, 'are you the United States land commissioner?

A look of tenderness shone in the old man's eyes. "Yes, suh," he added, Bill, the rescal, fixed up everything all right and wouldn't charge anything. This is a curious world. Well, I get of here."—Opie P. Read, in N. Y. World.

A Lecture on Economy.

A stupid looking tramp knocked at the door of one of the finest residences in Yonkers, and was received by the lady of the house.

"What do you want?" "Please, mum, give me a dime to buy a glass of bread—scuse me, I mean a loaf of beer.'

"I haven't got any money." "Haven't got any money? Then, madam, I would suggest that you move into a cheaper house; you are evidently living beyond your means. Economy, is wealth. Economize in the matter of clothes and house rent. Cut your expenses, and then, perhaps, some day you will have a dime to spare-a dime, madam, that may be the means of preventing a hungry and thirsty fellow mortal from committing suicide; or it may be a quarter-a coin of the value of 25 cents-that will upholster the dark clouds on the horizon of his despairing soul with a silver-plated lining, and fill his stomach with imported beer. THE CHICAGO BOY.

HE SEES A MULTITUDE OF THINGS AND ISN'T AT ALL ASTONISHED.

Eastern Grandeurs Are Indifferent to Him and He Implicity Believes There Is Nothing Like Chicago Anywhere.

"How did you find your way here?" inquired the Brooklyn uncle in sleepy surprise, rubbing his eyes as the Chicago Boy walked into the room.

"Huh!" said the boy as he let the shade up with a jump and dropped into a chair, "that's easy enough." "True" said the uncle, with affected and affecting meekness. "Anybody who could get around Chicago, where they name their steets so that Madison appears to be the next President to the sainted Washington, Polk succeeds Adams and Jefferson isn't in it, as you would say-anybody who as that, in fact; the best thing at Rockcould be up under such deplorable ignorance of elementary history as thatwould have no difficulty finding his way around in a city where there are reasonably well defined relations between the names of consecutive streets."

"Huh" again said the Chicago boy with increased scorn, "what 'relations, as you call them, are there between Poplar and Middagh and Cranberry and Orange and Clark? What's Middagh, anyway? Is it a tree or a fruit, and do oranges and cranberries grow on the same hill in this old town?"

And thus began a desperate struggle between a citizen of a solid, respectable city and a representative of a community that prides itself on stock-yards and a barber's shop with split dollars in the floor. It only lasted one week, but it was a hand-to-hand combat all the while. The uncle never felt safe except when the boy was asleep, and firmly believes that in that blessed time the boy devised new forms of pertinent criticism. When the period ended it was a drawn battle for the uncle at best and the Chicago boy went home proudly conscious of a humiliated opponent behind him.

There are good boys and bad boys; there are boys that you love and boys that you hate, but the Chicago boy is none of these. He is neither bad nor good, at least you never consider such qualities in connection with him. You cannot love or hate him, for that brings him down to the plane of other boys. You respect him, and when you come to know him you fear him. He knows every weak point in you by instinct and you know he knows it, he knows that you know it, and if you dwell for a moment upon this involved condition of affairs you get all tangled up and come back to the starting point, which is that do believe he was one of the biggest the Chicago boy is unlike any other boy. ject will be your final surrender.

He is what the printers might call an "upper-case" boy, and the only reason all the letters of the word are not capitals is an unwillingness on the part of the writer to concede everything. It was three months ago when all these things came to pass, and it will be nine mouths be strange indeed if you do not absorb before the Boy comes again. He is a thousand miles away, and a spark of pride and confidence in the glory of the things about us has revived in the writer's breast. Everything was conceded sisted that he should come again next when the Boy was here, and everything will be conceded once more next summer and as many summers as the Boy will come. He is as welcome as the first frost that opens the chestnut burs and the wind that brings the nuts to the ground, as prickly as the burs and as cheery and inspiring as the wind and as sound as the nuts.

"JUH!" AGAIN SAID THE BOY. Coming over in a bridge car the uncle called attention to the promenade, not to any particular feature of it, but that the Boy might know it was there.

"Yes," said the Boy, glancing indiffer-ently at the asphalt pavement on the approaches; "Ashland boulevard is paved with that for miles." He cast a right and flying. That beat any look at the elevated railroad trains at the trained horse I ever saw, because it New York entrance and observed: "I see you have come out to Pullman for your cars. In Broadway the uncle said with great seriousness: "Now, Herbert, this is a crowded thoroughfare." "It looks like West Madison street just beyond the bridge," interjected the boy, and the uncle groaned as he thought of the tumble-down, rickety buildings "just beyond the bridge" and then looked at the massive structures lining Broadway; "and you must be careful how you walk. People do not travel all over the sidewalk as they do in Chicago where they are not accustomed to walks. You must keep to the right as others do. Young man, if you run against people like that, getting over there where you don't belong, you'll get your head broken." 'Sandbagged, maybe," said the Boy, cheerfully. 'I understand that's pretty

"There hasn't been a case of sandbagging in New York in a quarter of a century," cried the uncle, stung to indignation at this outrageous accusation. 'Let's see," said the Boy, "there was -" and he mentioned two or three cases. "I guess those all happened within your quarter of a century." It is a peculiarity of the Chicago boy that he thrusts upon you the ownership roof of everything he does not like. He will a porter what your business there is, and "your cemetery" when you show him Trinity, or "your elevated road" when the fact that you have to pay five cents every time you use it is sufficient evidence for you that Mr. Gould and you are not in partnership. You own none of these things, but you are made to feel that you are personally responsible for their imperfections.

At luncheon on the plazza of one of the big hotels the Boy wanted ice-cream. There the uncle put his foot down and told him that while he would not venture to interfere in any way with his immortal soul he was responsible to the Boy's father for his physical continuance on earth and that ice-cream he could not and should not have. The Boy acquiesced and satisfied his longings later in the day by drinking two huge glasses of selizer lemonade, a concoction for which he had recently acquired an unnatural fondness.

The things out of which the Boy "took a fall." as he expressed it in the week he was here, are they not numbered in the guide book? The Statue of Liberty did not seem very much to him. He raced up the precipitous stairs to the head, strong of wind when he got there, and as fresh as a daisy, he saw the navy yard, and declared the Chicago the finest ship afloat, "as she ought to be with that name." he remarked. The Madison Square Garden was not as big as the Auditorium; nothing was as big away was the "dodging coon," and when the uncle, moved to that enthusiasm which occasionally possesses even a New Yorker, said, as they stood in Wall street, "Look at these magnificent buildings, there is nothing like them in Chicago," the Boy looked around and said, "Where?"

And he meant it, too. Whatever the faults of the Chicagoan, man or boy, there dwells not on the face of the earth a being more loyal to his city. Eastern men who go there to live notice it at once, and though they may not agree with all that is asserted of the big. boastful Western town, they admire the spirit that prompts it. To the Chicago man there is no place on the two hemispheres like his own city, there never has been and there never will be. The great cities of the Old World are viewed with more or less intelligent appreciation and the ruins of civilization greater, perhaps, than ours are "worth seeing." But, after all, they are only ruins, and the capitals of those other countries are in his eyes only a faint reflection of what his own city is to be. It is this magnificent civic loyalty that has made Chicago what it is, and in it rests the promise of the future. You can not live in it without feeling it all around you and it will some of it yourself. And so the days ran by and it became time for the clear-headed, critical Chicago Boy to go home. The uncle inyear, for though at times exasperatingly indifferent to all these things of which we are justly proud, the Chicago Boy is a wholesome, healthy boy, and a midsummer tonic. The Boy promised to come again, and he will. He generally admitted that he had had a good time, and there were faint evidences of a liking for New York. Perhaps it was the fear of this that made him anxious to go; perhaps it was that feeling that that he would never forget. there were certain familiar faces dearer than anything else in the world out in the big town where the Chicago Boy lives when he is at home. - N. Y. Times.

Sagacity of a Horse,

The surface roads have the patent table switches. They consist of an iron table within and one without the tracks, one balancing the other. As a good many lines use the same track here and there, these switches are turned this way and that every minute, the operation being performed by causing one horse to tread upon this or the other table. Coming down the street the other day on the front platform of a surface car I noticed the driver looking another way as we approached one of these switches. The switch was turned the wrong way, and while I was wondering whether I was on the wrong car or we would soon be on the wrong track, the old white horse on the near side shoved his fellow outside the tracks upon the right table, skillfully avoiding the inside plate himself by a half hop, skip and jump, and we went around the corner all was practical and had been picked up by a despised and generally execrated animal—the street car horse. -Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE MONKEY AND THE MIRROR. Some years ago an "aquarium and menagerie" in Boston came to grief and was sold under the hammer.

After the Sheriff's visit there remained nothing on the premises but a few mirrors, which had lined a passage way, and a cage filled with a forforn lot of monkeys which nobody had been willing to buy.

Mischievous boys broke the mirrors and threw pieces of them into the monkeys' cage. And so it befell that for want of something better to do one of the monkeys took up a piece of the glass and held it reflectively in his paws.
Suddenly the monkey started and his countenance assumed an expression of mingled astonishment and rage. He saw another monkey-or he thought he did -boldly looking through the glass at him, as he had seen people look at him through windows many a time and oft.

Disturbed by the fancied approach of this phantasmal monkey, which was nothing more nor less than the presentation of himself in the mirror, he chattered at it and extended a warning paw.

To his immense surprise the other monkey did the same thing, which was at once construed as an insult. The monkey holding the glass thereupon put forth a sudden paw, with a view to grasping the adversary who was deriding him.

But although the paw went around the side of the glass like lightning, it encountered nothing, for the simple reason that nothing was there.

Again and again did the angry monkey endeavor to come at the enemy, which chattered when he chattered and threatened when he threatened. He reached over the top of the glass, he threw down the glass and tried to flatten the enemy beneath it, but all was of no

To his apprehension there was a monkey behind the glass which could make himself visible or invisible at will. He sat back on his haunches and stared blankly into the glass—the picture of bewilderment and baffled rage. At this juncture a small, soft-haired monkey, who had been observing with great curiosity the maneuvers of his elder, descended deftly from his perch to the floor and slid quickly to the back of the mirror which the despairing monkey held. There he sat, cuddled in a little brown heap, blinking and wondering why he could not see through to his study. After a few moments the elder monkey's features assumed an air of intense decision. He had determined to make one more trial for a solution of this great question and if it failed he would own himself vanquished by magic. No, it could not be; he would feel once more behind the mirror. There must be a monkey there. In another instant his paw had descended upon the little soft-haired monkey. His face shone with triumph. He threw away the fragment of mirror, jumped to his feet, grappled the little monkey, and proceeded to give him a most tremendous thrashing. As he flew round the cage, wiping up the floor with the little monkey, it was easy to see he was convinced that he had been right all the time. This was the monkey who had been there and had derided him, and he meant to teach him a lesson

A COIN 3,000 YEARS OLD.

A Piece of Money That Is Older Than Christianity and Is Well Preserved. One of the oldest coins in existence is owned by Mr. J. A. Brudin of Chicago. It is from East Asia, and dates from the KING WU WANG'S COINS-B. C. 1116. B. C.). It is called Pu, the word meaning cloth made from cotton or hemp. It is made of bronze with raised letters and lines, the characters being in Chinese, but of such ancient date that the modern Chinaman can't make them out. It is still well preserved.

Andy Johnson's Answer.

Just after Andrew Johnson had vacated the Presidential seat the managers of the Simpson County, Ky., Agricultural and Mechanical Association decided that it would be a great advertisement to have the old gentleman attend the fair. "We don't care for him on Saturday," said the manager, "for on that day we shall have a pretty big crowd anyhow. Wednesday will be the day I will write to the ex-President."

The following letter was sent to Mr. Johnson: "Dear Sir:-The people of the wonderful county of Simpson, feeling a great interest in one of America's most gifted sons, have decided to invite you to be present at our fair grounds on Wednesday, the 6th of October, where they wish to shake your hand. Please let us know by return mail."

He let them know by return mail. The old gentleman turned the letter over and wrote the following: "I am no menagerie. A. Johnson."-Beattle Press.

POLITICAL POINTERS.

Prominent Citizen Feels Slighted that Volatile William Should Ignore Him and is Surprised that Florence is not Acquainted with John C. Schudert.

"And such is fame!" Dramatically ejaculated the Prominent Citizen, as the TIMES man entered: "Great Heavens! That John C. Schubert, after being elected and serving two one year terms as county commissioner and lately nominated and elected the composer. Jacques Offenbach, conducted the Orchestra at the first performance. Clerk of the Criminal Court of Cook County, and who, according to the German score, and the performance is not Globe, imagines he is the Demoaratic party, personally, individually and Edgar Smith and Charles Kenney, and collectively, that he, John C. Schubert, should be styled "J. C. Schu- era was performed at the New York Casino berth" twice in one short article in to for one hundred mights and the magnifiprominent and generally known a Bourbon sheet as the 27th Ward Democrat. Not even known by the great and only Volatile William, the immortal, irrepressible and indefatigible exponent and expounder of Democratic scene of the third act is a co-ridor in the principles in old Jefferson! Alas, alas, poor Schubert, how bad he will feel, how melancholy and heartbroken, when he sadly peruses the 27th Ward Democrat, with whose well known and widely circulated columns he is so familiar!

"But never mind Schubert," continued the prominent citizen; "It is of myself I wish for a moment to speak, for I notice Volatile William ignored Grog and George Olmi as the adjutant. me in his last week's issue, and I really feel slighted. Indeed, I do. And just think what will that one paid subscriber in Bowmanville say when with his eagle eye he closely scrutinizes the first page of the Democrat and fails to discover any scurrility relative to me! He may order his paper stopped and returned with the other 50 which are sent to that precinct of the 27th Ward only to be sent back "refused" or "uncalled for," and then there would be trouble. But there may be some extenuating circumstances for it is possible that for the intense heart interest, powerful Billy's Boss down at the printing office "cut down" his "copy" and est of the audience from the rise to the fail crowded the article out, for, as I have of the curtain. There is also a bright win of humor running through the whole once before intimated, his name is play like 'a streak o'sunshine." that tends only telerated at the head of his first page, and he can only put in what he are in the usual elaborate seyle for which is allowed. By the way, on the same page may be found the somewhat high of scenic app intments and effects that will sounding motto: "Tariff for Revenue prove a revalation in the possibilities of only," which would come nearer the truth were it "Democrat for Revenue only."

"I hear your folks have bought out son the ARGUS, and that Florance is bidding the Democrats "Beware! I hope they are "bewaring" for it behooves them to. Is it true you sent out 1,500 extra copies of your new acquisition in the 27th Ward? Must have flooded the market, I should think; but it is a good advertisement for you.

For several weeks Florence has been talking and hinting about prospective aldermanic candidates, and beseeching his multitude of subscribers to patiently await until, in the goodness of his heart, he shall condescend to enlighten them as to whom they will be permitted to vote for, if good, staunch, standard Democrats. But not a word thus far as to who shall be named. Patience will cease to be a virtue after a while. A QUEER RACE.

A STORY OF A STRANGE PEOPLE,

BY WILLIAM WESTALL

CHAPTER XVIII. - DENZIL FANE.

. learned much about the queer Face from the "Santa Anna's" log-books and the other books to which Mr. Field, by his mistress' command, gave me access; by reading between the lines, by conversation with that gentleman and with others, and from my own observation, I learned even more. The gist of this information I propose to embody in the present chapter, for it is essential, not only to a right understanding of the people among whom I found myself, but of the events that afterward came to pass, as also of my own personal narrative, which I shall presently

It will be remembered that when Mr. Hare, the chaplain, threw his diary into the sea, he thought he was like to die, and that his companions would not long outlive him. As the reader already knows, the anticipations were not realized. Mr. Hare lived a good deal longer than he expected, and only a proportion of the ship's company-the sick, the wounded, and nearly all the Spanish prisoners-succumbed. The fittest survived, in fact: but they suffered terribly from scurvy and thirst, and were saved when almost at the last gasp by a tremendous downpour of tropical rain, followed by a succession of storms, which drove them hundreds of miles out of their course, dismasted and damaged the ship, and left her little better than a wreck. For days together the officers were unable to take an observation. Before jury-masts could be rigged and damages made good, they drifted into the fog, from which they emerged only to strike on the Painted Rocks. Fortunately, however, the ship was jammed between two reefs, and impaled on a third in such

This happened in the night, and the joy of the harassed and weary sailors may be imagined when at day-break they saw before them a land of waving forests and running waters. As the island was not marked on any of their charts, they had no means of knowing whether it was the possession of a European power or inhabited only by savages. But as the boats (which were at once got out) approached the shore, they were met by a multitude of canoes. crowded with copper-colored aborigines, whose demeanor showed that they had never before beheld men with white skins and hairy faces. They brought fruit and other offerings, and made overtures of friendship which the English sailors were only too glad to reciprocate, since it was evident that, whatever else happened, they would have to remain on the island for a considerable time; and being too few to conquer a whole people, their only chance was to make friends of them.

The natives, as Commander Fane thought

a way that she could neither sink nor make were Caribs, of the same race as the unforinnates who inhabited the Bahamas when Columbus discovered America, and who were afterward so completely wiped out by the Spanish Conquistadores. They were gentle and hospitable, and looking upon their visitors as superior beings, treated them with great deference and respect. Though for the most part hunters and fishermen, the Caribs of the island were not wholly uncivilized. They dwelt in villages; their houses were something more than mere shelter-huts; they had a rudimentary knowledge of gardening and agriculture: the make of their flint and bone tools and weapons showed considerable skill; their ornaments were deftly wrought; and they contrived, in a rude way, to spin and weave, fashion into clothing, and even t) dye, the indigenous cotton of the island. Physically well made, with senses wonderfully acute, they had a ready wit and dignified manners, and Commander Fane was not long in coming to the conclusion that the islanders might easily be converted into a Christian and civilized people.

The first idea of the castaways was to build a boat big enough to carry them to England or the Bahamas; to which end they lost no time in taking out of the "Santa Anna" everything likely to be useful to them, and that was pretty nearly all she contained-ropes, spars, sails, tools, arms, ammunition, and the rest. They even broke up and took some of the planking, and stripped as much of the copper sheathing as they could get at. The treasure was also removed and safely stored.

All this occupied two months or more, and it was barely completed when the "Santa Anna," which had been terribly buffeted in a storm, went to pieces.

So far the men had worked willingly and well, obeying their officers without hesitation; but when it became a question of building a boat and "affronting new dangers" (to use Commander Fane's own words), they began to murmur. Why, they said, should they take a perilous voyage in a frail craft-a voyage of at least two thousand miles (that being the distance to the nearest British possession)-with the almost certainty (if they should escape shipwreck a second time) of falling into the hands of the Spaniards and being inmured for years in some horrible prison, possibly tortured and put to death by the Inquisition? Why not stay where they were? The country was fertile and beautiful, the climate genial, the people kindly. What could they do better than make the Fair Island (A name conferred on the country by the sailors because of its supposed resemblance to the Isle of Wight, which in the last century was generally known as the "Fair Island") their home, and let the world wag? Whether this idea had already occurred to Fane does not appear, but before the suggestion could be considered an event occurred which seems to have helped him to a decision. He and his men were living in tents and huts near the present site of Fairhaven, when one morning several of the native chiefs made their appearance, and gave them to understand that they were threatened with a grave danger; and taking the commandant round the mountain, pointed to the west, where there was a breach in the barrier of rocks, and where the mist occasionally lifted.

Looking through his glass, Fane saw that the sea was simply black with canoes, which were rapidly approaching the coast. It was a flotilla of invaders, and the Carib chiefs, who seemed greatly alarmed, implored him by signs to join his forces to theirs and help them to repulse the foe, Fane, who wanted nothing better, ordered his plan of campaign on the spot. It would be impossible to reach the west coast before the invaders (whom, for want of a better name, the sailors christened "Cariberoes") disembarked, the more especially as the country was thickly wooded sweens round the foot of the mountain, and flows half-way across the island in a westerly direction. It was on the banks vivors of the crew, may have preferred freedom and the Fair Island to life on the

that the English officer resolved to intercept the Cariberoes and give them battle. His men were summoned forthwith, and embarked on the four boats which had once belonged to the "Santa Anna." The crews were, of course, well armed, and the long-boat carried a small carronade in her bows. A few hours sufficed to organize the expedition, which included a hundred canoes, carrying about a thousand natives, armed with bows and arrows and spears. the whole under Mr. Fane's command.

The spot he selected for making a stand was at a ford near an opening in the forest that the invaders must needs traverse in order to reach the eastern or Fairhaven side of the island, which was assumed to be their objective point, as thereabouts were the principle Carib villages.

By great exertion Fane and his men succeeded in reaching the ford three or four hours before the enemy put in an appearance. Keeping his blue-jackets in reserve, he sent the greater part of the Caribs to meet the invaders in the open, with orders to fall back fighting as the latter advanced, re-cross the river, and take up a position among the brushwood on the banks. At the same time, feeling himself quite strong enough, and having no doubt as to the result, he ordered two of his officers to take a second party of Caribs through the forest, lie in ambush near the invaders' line of retreat, and cut them off from the boats.

These dispositions made, the allied forces awaited the onset of the enemy, who came on several thousands strong. The Caribs, after making a show of resistance, fell back, and then pretending to be panic-stricken, made in desperate haste for the river, the foe in full cry after them. When the latter were well within range, the blue-jackets (who had been lying perdu under the bank) opened fire on them both with their muskets and the carronade. The invaders, utterly dumfounded by this the rallied, and, turning to bay, showed a most resolute front.

On this the commander ordered ageneral charge, which he led in person. Then followed a desperate struggle-"the hottest thing I was ever in," wrote Fane. The blue-jackets, after giving the Cariberoes a couple of volleys point-blank, fell on them with cutlasses and clubbed muskets, and were bravely supported by their native allies. The fight lasted fifteen minutes. and there is no telling how it might have ended if the ambush party, hearing the not a hundred men who could hold a confiring, had not made a diversion in the rear, whereupon the invaders, being seized with a panic, threw away their arms, and made off in all directions. Many were killed; more were taken prisoners; only a very small remnant succeeded in reaching believe pretty nearly everything the Great their boats and getting away.

The Caribs had no idea of keeping the prisoners alive, and were proceeding to make short work of them, when Commander Fane interposed. He would have nobody killed in cold blood. The question then arose as to how the prisoners were to be disposed of. To let them go away other day. To let them roam about the country was equally impolitic; they would tive, and that was adopted. They age in which he lived was neither a senti- end Fane had in view. mental nor a humanitarian age. He not only thought there was no wrong in slavery, but that the best use to which the prisoners could be put was to reduce them to servitude. So they were bound in twos and threes and distributed among their captors, and slavery became one of the permanent institutions of the island.

The invaders, as Fane afterward ascertained, came from an island about a hunhe first saw them their appearance excited or accept the other. his unbounded surprise. Some were black, others copper-colored or red; but the greater part had the same spotted skins as the Caliban crew of Field's boat-were, in fact, their ancestors. How African negroes had found their way so far west was a matter of conjecture; they were probably, as Fane surmised, the descendants of a cargo of revolted slaves, who, after killing their captors, had landed on the island and intermarried with the natives.

Speaking for myself, I am unable to assign any cause for the peculiar hue of these people, or to decide whether it was the outcome of some subtle evolutionary process, or a mere caprice of atavism. As the mixture of aborigines with Englishmen on the one hand, and negroes on the other, produced analogous results, the piebaldism of neighbors. their progeny may be attributable either to soil or climate, or possibly to some racial peculiarity. I have heard of tribes in Central America presenting similar characteristics, and it is a well-known fact that the issue of a black and white, or a mulatto and a white, are not always of the same type. Their children are occasionally born with black limbs and a white face, or vice versa, and I know of no reason why the offspring of mixed races should not have variegated skins rather than skins of one uniform color throughout. Miscegenation has produced even stranger results.

But as I am simply relating my own personal adventures, it is no part of my purpose to suggest explanations of the obscure natural phenomena which have come under my notice.

And now to resume my story. When the prisoners (among whom were many women, the object of the invaders being to take entire possession of the island) had been disposed of, the Carib chiefs waited on Commander Fane, and, after expressing unbounded gratitude for the great service he had rendered them, begged of him to stay with them for good, and offered him the sovereignty of the country. As for his people, they might have as much land and as many slaves as they liked, and choose for themselves wives from among the most beautiful girls of the island.

It was not like a British officer to accept such an offer as this, for doing so involved both a dereliction of duty and a breach of discipline. To remain on the island, except under compulsion, was tantamount to desertion; and desertion by a combatant officer in war time is an offense punishable with death. Yet Denzil Fane not only did accept the offer of the Carib chiefs, but constrained his brother officers to follow his example. I assume the constraint, albeit no mention of it appears in the records, because it can hardly be supposed that the officers-the two lieutenants, the master's mates, the surgeon, the chaplain, and the half dozen midshipmen-would willingly agree to expatriate themselves and renounce all hope of ever seeing England again. But the recalcitrants were a small minority, and, being too few to build ship and get away by themselves, they lies below Fairhaven joins a stream which | had no alternative but to throw in their lot with the others and make the best of it. And some of the officers, like the sur-

of this stream (navigable for small boats) ocean wave, for the British man-of-war of that time was not exactly a paradis

As for Denzil Fane's motives I can offer no adequate explanation. One, and perhaps the most powerful, may have been that since his arrival on the island he had married a wife. The Spanish captain of the "Santa Auna," who fell on his own quarter-deck, had with him his wife and daughter, the latter a handsome girl of nineteen. The wife (Senora Velasquez y Blanco) survived her husband only a few weeks; but Mercedes was among the remnant who reached the island, and a month afterward she and Fane were made one by the Rev. Robert Hare.

If the commander had left a wife in England (and such things have happened), his reluctance to return thither would be accounted for. But, though his conduct may have been questionable, and his motives obscure, there can be no question that Denzil Fane was a man of resolute will and strong character-a born leader of men, I should say. If his people thought they were going to lead idle lives, they were very much mistaken. So soon as the decision was taken to remain on the island he assigned to every one his task, organized a government, and promulgated a code of laws. Opposition (if the idea of it was ever conceived) would have been out of the question: the Caribs simply idolized their "White Chief," and rendered him the most implicit obedience. Roads were made, houses built, gardens laid out, trees cut down, and the country opened out. Sailors are always handy fellows, and among so many there were naturally some with a turn for mechanics and engineering, and great improvements were effected in the native methods of manufacture, and several new industries set on foot. Into this work Fane threw so much energy that I am disposed to think he wanted to justify himself to his own conscience by civilizing the Carib subjects, and making the unexpected reception, retreated in great island the home of a happy and thriving confusion; but once among the trees again, community. This may possibly have been his ruling motive from the first; and if so, there can be no doubt that with the materials at his command he succeeded better than might have been expected. Some of the rules he laid down are worth mention. Although he acquired the Carib tongue, he made English the official language, and insisted on the Caribs learning it. The process was probably slow and painful in the beginning, but in the end the desired result was attained. At the time of my arrival on the island there were versation in the Carib tongue. He also made them Christians-after a fashionwhich was all the more easy, as their own primitive religion seems to have sat very lightly on them, and they were ready to White Chief told them.

In his own family Denzil Fane made the practice of athletics and the training of the senses a religious duty, whereby it came to pass that his descendants were distinguished by exceptional bodily strength. litheness of limb, acuteness of hearing, and keenness of vision. He called his government a common wealth, and himself its "Protector" (from which I infer that he was an admirer of Oliver Cromwell); but in reality it was a paternal despotism of a very uncompromising sort. The ruling body was ostensibly a Council of Nine, presided over by the Protector, and nominated by himself; and though they were at liberty to offer suggestions and make proposals, he was dred miles east of Fair Island, and when under no obligation either to adopt the one

[To be Continued.] Mr. and Mrs. Sparrow.

In the yard of a Scranton bird student a pair of English sparrows began a few weeks ago to get ready to go to housekeeping, says a correspondent of the N. Y. Sun. They took up their abode in a little box that was fastened to the top of a pole. Other sparrows undertook to occupy the box, but the pugnacious first-comers soon drove them away, and from that time on the plucky pair fixed up their household and got everything in readiness to raise a family without being disturbed by their apparently envious

When the industrious birds were nearly ready to settle down to a quiet married life an accident happened that caused a row between the pair. One day before the female had begun to sit, her husband flirted away and was gone a good deal longer than usual. During his absence the female busied herself by flying from the nest to the yard and back, adding finishing touches to her household and sprucing things up inside of the box. By and by Mr. Sparrow returned, but he didn't look as neat and natty as he did when he sailed away. In some way he had lost all of his tail feathers while he was gone and his wife wouldn't have anything to do with him or let him enter the house. He seemed to try to explain matters to her but she wouldn't listen to him at all, chirped at him spitefully, and fought him whenever he attempted to approach her. The student knew that the bobtailed bird was the rightful husband by a peculiar mark on his head and he watched the result of the family trouble with deep interest. For two days the unhappy husband coaxed and begged his wife to treat him as she had formerly done, but his pleadings made her all the more determined to get rid of him for good. All at once the bobtailed sparrow disappeared and has never been around since. The female continued to occupy the box, and inside of three days she got another husband, set up housekeeping anew, and in due time hatched out a nest full of little

DR. TALMAGE PREACHES ABOUT BABYLON AND ITS SIN.

A Brilliant Description of the Glory of the Ancient City and the Revels Held Therein. - Lessons Deduced for the Use of Every-Day People.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 25. - Dr. Talmage reached the following sermon this morning in the Academy of Music in this city, and he repeated it tonight in the New York Academy of Music. His text was Daniel 5:30: "In that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans slain."

After the site of Babylon had been elected, two million of men were employed for the construction of the wall and principal works. The walls of the city were sixty miles in circumference. They were surrounded by a trench, out of which had been dug the material for the construction of the city. There were twenty-five gates of solid brass on each side of the square city. Between every two gates a great watch tower sprang up into the heavens. From each of the twenty-five gates, on either side, a street ran straight through to the gate on the other side, so that there were fifty streets, each fifteen miles long, which gave to the city an appearance of wonderful regularity. The houses did not join each other on the ground, and between them were gardens and shrubbery. From house-top to housetop bridges swung, over which the inhabitants were accustomed to pass. A branch of the Euphrates went through the city, over which a bridge of marvelous structure was thrown, and under which a tunnel ran. To keep the river from overflowing the city in times of freshet, a great lake was arranged to catch the surplus, in which the water was kept as in a reservoir until times of drought, when it was sent streaming down over the thirsty land. A palace stood at each end of the Euphrates bridge; one palace, a mile and threeuarters in compass, and the other palace seven and a half miles in circumference. The wife of Nebuchadnezzar, having been brought up among the mountains of of Media, could not stand it in this flat country of Babylon, and so, to please her, Nebuchadnezzar had a mountain, four hundred feet high, built in the midst of the city. This mountain was surrounded by terraces, for the support of which great arches were lifted. On top of these arches flat stones were laid; then a layer of reeds and bitumen; then two rows of bricks, closely cemented; then thick sheets of lead, upon which the soil was placed. The earth here deposited was so deep that the largest trees had room to anchor their roots. All the glory of the flowery tropics was spread out at that tremendous height, until it must have seemed to one below as though the clouds were all in blossom, and the yery sky leaned on the shoulder of the cedar. At the top an engine was constructed, which drew water from the Euphrates, far below, and made it spout up amid this garden of the skies. All this to please his wife! I think she must have been

In the midst of this city stood also the temple of Belus. One of its towers was one-eighth of a mile high, and on the top of it an observatory, which gave the astronomers great advantage, as, being at so great a height, one could easily talk with the stars. This temple was full of cups, and statues, and censers, all of gold. One image weighed a thousand Babylonish talents, which would be equal to fifty-two million dollars. All this by day, but now night was about to come cown on Babylon. The shadows of her two hundred and fifty towers began to lengthen. The Euphrates rolled on, touched by the flery splendors of the setting sun, and gates of brass, burnished and glittering, opened and shut like doors of flame. The hanging gardens of Babylon, wet with the heavy dew, began to pour, from starlit flowers and dripping leaf, a fragrance for many miles around. The streets and squares were lighted for dance, and frolic, and promenade. The theatres and galleries of art invited the wealth, and pomp, and grandeur of the city to rare entertainments. Scenes of riot and wassail were mingled in every street; godless mirth, and outrageous excess, and splendid wickedness came to the king's palace, to do their mightiest deeds of darkness. A royal feast tonight at the king's palace! Rushing up to the gates are chariots, upholstered with precious cloths from Dedan. and drawn by fire-eyed horses from Togarmah, that rear and neigh in the grasp I that you had better, accept of the Lord of the charioteers; while a thousand lords dismount, and women dressed in all the splendors of Syrian emerald, and the colorblending of agate and the chasteness of coral, and the somber glory of Tyrian purple, and princely embroideries, brought from afar by camels across the desert, and, by ships of Tarshish across the sea.

Open wide the gates and let the guests come in. The chamberlains and cup-bearers are all ready. Hark to the rustle of the robes, and to the carol of the music! See the blaze of the jewels! Lift the banners. Fill the cups. Clap the symbals. Blow the trumpets. Let the night go by with song and dance and ovation, and let that Babylonish tongue be palsied that will not say, "O, King Belshazzar, live forever!" Away with care from the palace! Tear royal dignity to tatters! Pour out more wine! Give us more light, wilder music, sweeter perfume! Lord shouts to ord, captain ogles to captain. Goblets clash, decanters rattle. There come in the vile song and the drunken hiccough, and the slavering lip, and the guffaw of idiotic laughter, bursting from the lips of princes, flushed, reeling, bloodshot; while mingling with it all I hear, "Huzza! huzza! for great Belshazzar!" What is that on the plastering of the wall? Is it a spirit? Is it a phantom? Is it God? Out of the black sleeve of the darkness a finger of flery terror trembles through the air and comes to the wall. circling about as though it would write, and then, with sharp tip of flame, engraves on the plastering the doom of the king. The music stops. The goblet falls from the nerveless grasp. There is a thrill. There is a start. There is a thousand-voiced shriek of horror. Let Daniel be brought in to read that writing. He comes in. He reads it: "Weighed in the balance and found wanting."

Meanwhile the Assyrians, who for two years had been laying siege to that city, took advantage of that carousal and came in. I hear the feet of the conquerors on the palace stairs. Massacre rushes in with a thousand gleaming knives. Death bursts upon the scene; and I shut the door of that

I go on to learn that when God writes anything on the wall, a man had better read it as it is. Daniel did not misinterpret or modify the handwriting on the wall. It is all foolishness to expect a minister of the Gospel to preach always of things that the people like, or the people choose. Young men, what shall I preach to you tonight? Shall I tell you of the dignity of human nature? Shall I tell you of the wonders that our race has accomplished? 'Oh! no," you say, "tell me the message that came from God." I will. If there is any handwriting on the wall it is this lesson: "Accept of Christ and be saved." I might talk of a great many other things; but that is the message, and so I declare it. Jesus never flattered those to whom he preached. He said to those who did wrong, and who were offensive in his sight, "Ye generation of vipers! ye whited sepulchres! How can ye escape the damnation of hell!" Paul the apostle preached before a man who was not ready to hear him preach. What subject did he take? Did he say: "Oh! you are a very good man, a very fine man, a very noble man?" No; he preached of righteousness to a man who was unrighteous; of temperance to a man who was the victim of bad appetites; of the judgement to come to a man who was unfit for it. So we must always declare the message that hoppens to come to us. Daniel must read it as it is. Another lesson that comes to us: there is great difference between the opening of the banquet of sin and its close. Young man, if you had looked in upon the banquet in the first few hours, you would have wished you had been invited there, and could sit at the feast. "Oh! the grandeur of Belshazzar's feast!" you would have said; but look in at the close of the banquet, and your blood curdles with horror. The King of Terrors has there a ghastlier banquet; human blood is the wine, and dying groans are the music. Sin has made itself a king in the earth. It has crowned itself. It has spread a banquet. It invites all the world to come to it. It has hung in its banqueting-hall the spoils of all kingdoms, and the banners of all nations. It has gathered from all music. It has strewn, from its wealth, the tables and the floors, and the arches. And yet how often is that banquet broken up; and how horrible is its end! Ever and anon there is a handwriting on the wall. A king falls. A great culprit is arrested. The knees of wickedness knock together. God's judgment, like an armed host, breaks in upon the banquet; and that night is Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans,

I learn further from this subject that Death sometimes breaks in upon a banquet. Why did he not go down to the prisons in Babylon? There were a few persons there that would like to have died. I suppose there were men and women in torture in that city who would have welcomed death. But he comes to the palace; and just at the time when the mirth is dashing to the tiptop pitch. Death breaks in at the banquet.

We saw the same thing, on a larger scale, illustrated at the last war in this country. Our whole nation had been sitting at a national banquet—north, south, east and west. What grain was there, but we grew it on our bills. What invention was there, but our rivers must turn the new wheel and rattle the strange shuttle. What warm furs, but our traders must bring them from the Arctic. What fish, but our nets must sweep them for the markets. What music, but it must sing in our halls. What eloquence, but it must speak in our senates. He! to the national banquet, reaching from mountain to mountain and from sea to sea! To prepare that banquet the sheepfolds and the aviaries of the country sent their best treasures. The orchards piled up on the table their sweetest fruits. The presses burst out with new wines. To sit at that table came the yeomanry of New Hampshire, and the lumbermen of Maine, and the Carolinian from the rice fields, and the western emigrant the feast ended. What meant those mounds thrown up at Chickamauga, Shiloh, Atlanta, Gettysburg, South Mountain? What meant those golden grain fields, turned into a pasturing ground for cavalry horses? What meant the corn fields gullied with the wheels of the heavy supply train? Why those rivers of tears—those lakes of blood? God was angry! Justice must come! A handwriting on the wall! The nation had been weighed and found wanting. Darkness! Darkness! Woe to the north! Woe to the south! Woe to the cast! Woe to the west! Death at the banquet!

Are there any here who are unprepared for the eternal world? Are there any here who have been living without God, and without hope? Let me say to you Jesus Christ, lest suddenly your last chance be gone. The lungs will cease to breathe; the heart will stop. The time will come when you shall go no more to the office, or to the store, or to the shop. Nothing will be left but Death, and Judgment, and Eternity. Oh! flee to God this hour! If there be one in this presence who has wandered far away from Christ, though he may not have heard the call of the Gospel for many a year, I invite him now to come and be saved. Flee from thy sin! Flee to the stronghold of the Gospel! Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation.

Good-night, my young friends! May you have rosy sleep, guarded by him who never slumbers! May you awake in the morning strong and well! But, oh! art thou a despiser of God? Is this thy last night on earth? Shouldest thou be awakened in the night by something, thou knowest not what, and there be shadows floating in the room, and a handwriting on the wall, and you feel that your last hour is come, and there be a fainting of the disease he actually treats than the at the heart, and a tremor in the limb, and a catching of the breath—then thy doom would be but an echo of the words of the text: "In that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain."

Hear the invitation of the Gospel! There may be some one in this house to whom I shall never speak again, and therefore let it be in the words of the Gospel, and not in my own, with which I close: "Ho, every one that thirsteth! Come ye to the waters. And let him that hath no money come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." "Come unto Me, all ve who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give He does this because, in the treatment of you rest." Oh! that my Lord Jesus would now make himself so attractive to your souls that you can not resist him; and that, if you have never prayed before, or have not prayed since those days when you knelt down at your mother's knee, then that tonight you might pray saying:

Just as I am, without one plea But that thy blood was shed for me. And that thou bid'st me come to thee, O Lamb of God, I come!

Science Overcomes Deafness Just now the medical world is engaged in discussing the new device for deafness called Sound Disc. No invention, of late has attracted so much interest among the medical profession. Its perfection, which is now an established fact, has resulted in the overthrow of many pet theories of there being no relief for a vast number of cases of deafness.

This ingenious discovery was made by H. J. Wales, of Bridgeport, Conn., and coming as it does with the approval of some of the leading aurists of the world it can hardly fail to prove of great value to both the profession and the afflicted.

THE BOLD BLACKSNAKE.

HE IS SAID TO BE A FIGHTER IN HIS WAY.

the Rattlesnake is Venomous He Cowardly, and when Seen Can Easily Be Avoided -- The Blacksnake Will Boldly Attack a Foe.

Ask any of the farmers or hunters hereabouts whether they are afraid of rattlesnakes and they will answer promptly that they don't mind them very much, writes a Pennsylvania correspondent. Ask them if they fear blacksnakes, and they will say yes without the slightest hesitation. This fear of blacksnakes has come down to most of them from their parents with a story that none of them is ever tired of telling. They all declare that it is true, and it is so well known and is told with so much solemnity and evident fear by the natives that it is hard to disbelieve it. The story runs like this:

Many years ago a well-to-do farmer lived with his family near the barren land verging on Pike County. His wife was city bred and unusued to many of the hardships that are a part of San Francisco has recently received of the farming woman's life. She was strong and hardy, however, with plenty of nerve and grit enough to make the best of things. One day, while her husband was working in a clearing a good distance from the naries, with sixty-eight professors and house, she went down to the spring, for a pail of water. As she stooped over to fill the pail a blacksnake, that had been lying coiled near the spring, jumped at her. She screamed and jumped back, but the snake had buried its fangs in her dress, and before she could recover herself sufficiently to shake him off he had wound himself about her so tightly as to prevent her from walking. Then he began slowly to crawl upward. The poor woman struck at the snake with her hands.

They were badly bitten, but she was so overcome with fright that she did not mind this, and kept on striking at him. The serpent kept crawling up until his coils were about her breast. She tried to tear him loose, but she was not strong enough. She became nearly paralyzed by terror. The snake finally coiled himself around her neck and choked her. She started toward the house, but she had only gone a short distance when she fell. In the evening she was found by her husband lying dead, with the snake still coiled about her neck.

This story, with the well-known fact that a blacksnake is ever ready and makes the native afraid of him, and the man who kills a blacksnake is thought to have won a greater battle than the slayer of a dozen rattlesnakes.

"You can't frighten a blacksnake," said one old hunter, "and the more you try to the more he ain't frightened. A rattlesnake is a coward, and will run if you give him half a chance. If he doesn't get the chance he will rattle in fear and then strike in desperation. A rattlesnake's bite is not nearly so dangerous as many people suppose. All that you have to do to render the wound harmless is to cut it as deep as the fangs went, and then go to the nearest brook and wash it thoroughly. A common poultice will soon heal the wound made by your knife. But if a big blacksnake tackles you, and you give him a chance to get one coil about your body, why, then, look out, for it is your life or his."

Her Hickory Switch Male a Man of Him.

Twenty years or more ago Mrs. John M. Crowell, then Miss Grant, was the teacher of a country school near Yellow Springs, Ohio, says the Atchison Globe. Among her pupils was an orphan boy whom the principal farmer of the district had found in Illinois and taken to raise. The boy was capable and bright, but he lacked application, and on that account was never prepared in his lessons. Miss Grant complained of the boy's shortcoming to his adopted father, and was advised to wear a hickory gad out upon him.

She hesitated, for the boy was big and strong, although good natured. But the father insisted, and, after warning the boy several times, she one day used the hickory upon him in the presence of the entire school. It humbled the lad, and it was feared that he would run away that night. He was accordingly watched. But instead of running away he took a candle and went to his room, where the light was seen to burn the greater part of the night. The next day the boy was in his place in school as usual, and throughout the day he was perfect in his lessons. The reformation was complete, and the orphan became famous in the district.

Miss Grant came West and married Mr. Crowell. A few years ago, while Mr. Crowell was still in the service of the Post Office Department, he was riding over the Fort Scott and Wichita road. The conductor was new to the business and was averse to recognizing Mr. Crowell's credentials. But the president of the road happened to be in his car, attached to the rear of the train, and the credentials were referred to him. Pretty soon the presldent appeared in person, and led Mr. Crowell back into his car.

The City Horse. A horse has a great deal to learn before he becomes a good and valuable citizen of New York, says the Sun. He has more to learn now than ever before. During the war he had to learn to hearken quietly to martial music, and he had to get used to lines 99 willing to fight anything that lives, of shouting firemen and rattling engines. He mustn't mind the engines now; but the drums and fifes and redcoated laddies are no longer within his ken. Instead of these, however, he has first to get accustomed to the stone pavements and to the noise; then he must learn about the street cars, and and the elevated railroads, and the electric lights which swing above his head and flash out, turning pitch darkness into almost daylight; he must learn not to mind the electric cars and the cable cars that creep ur without any visible means of propulsion; and above, yet below all, he mustn't mind walking up to and through huge columns of white steam, rising everywhere about the city streets. When one thinks that the horse is naturally timorous, the value of a city horse's training becomes ap-

A Few Hints About Oil Lamps. The tank or reservoir, for holding the oil should be of metal rather than china or glass. Wicks should be dry, be just long enough to reach to the bottom of the reservoir, and be softly woven. They should be just wide enough to easily fill the wickholder, without being pulled or squeezed in. It is necessary, too, that they be soaked with oil just before using the lamp. When the lamp is lit the wick should be at first turned down and then slowly raised, as it burns. One great essential to avoid all odors from a lamp is to have it thoroughly clean and all charred wick and dust removed before lighting. In putting out a lamp, where it has no extinguishing appliances, the wick should be turned down and a sharp puff blown across the top of the chimney, but not down on it. A little systematic care in the use of a lamp will bring, instead of discomfort, a warm, cheering atmosphere to the home. - New York Ledger.

An Adventurous Bush

There was noticed one summer in Concord, N. H., an odd appearance in the topmost branches of a tree believed to be one hundred and twentyfive years old, and the observers could hardly believe their eyes. But when an adventurous marine climbed up the old giant he found that the sight had not been deceived. A current bush was growing contentedly up there, and clusters of ripe fruit were hanging from the stems as if it were the natural thing for currant bushes to grow in the tops of century-old trees. It is supposed that earth collected, by the winds of years, in the little clefts, and that the seeds of the currant had been brought by birds, to find their home in the gathered soil. - Wide Awake.
