

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

Sights and Scenes from the Bridal Trip of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Robertson.

Sunday afternoon we walked across Brooklyn Bridge, went through Washington Park and passed by Dr. Talmage's residence, a brown-stone front, plain, but massive. We also saw Beecher's statue in front of the city hall.

Monday we rode out to Riverside Park, and visited Grant's tomb. It is built of brick, with an iron grating for the door. The casket rests in an iron case. A large wreath of laurels hangs at the head, besides the national emblems in straw flowers in red, white and blue, which almost fill the tomb. A faded wreath of white roses lies on the casket, and a silver plate bears the inscription:

U. S. Grant.
Died July, 1885.

An officer guards the tomb constantly. A large monument of white stone, dome shaped; is being erected close by.

We spent several hours in Central Park. It is 2 1/4 miles long and 1 1/4 miles wide, contains 9 miles of roads, 5 miles of bridge paths, and 28 miles of walks. It was laid out in 1857. We noticed two statues in the park—one of Alex Hamilton and one of Daniel Webster. The latter inscribed with the great statesman's words: "Liberty and Union, now and forever; one and inseparable." The Egyptian obelisk, "Cleopatra's Needle," is also here. It is about 100 feet high and rests on a base 8 feet square by 6 feet high. It was quarried in the Sixteenth Century B. C., was removed to Alexandria, Egypt, and erected there by the Romans 12 B. C. It was presented to the United States by the khedive of Egypt, and was removed to the United States in 1880 in an iron case, in tow behind an ocean vessel. W. K. Vanderbilt bore all the expense of removing and placing in position. It is covered with hieroglyphics that no one as yet has been able to decipher.

We visited the Metropolitan Museum of Natural Art. Three of the paintings that drew our attention were: "The Horse Fair," by Rosa Bonheur, which many will remember seeing at the World's Fair; "Joan of Arc," by J. Bastian LePage, and "Woodland and Cattle," by August Bonheur.

From there we went to the American Museum of Natural History. Here we saw a specimen of every animal, bird and reptile in America and of nearly all the other countries. There, in a glass case, is a piece of the old "charter oak" tree. This tree blew over on August 21, 1856. In New York City we saw several statues. Ericson, Farragut, Greeley, Nathan Hale, Gen. LaFayette, Lincoln, Martyr monument to those who died in prison ships, Columbus, and Webster.

Fifth avenue is the principal residence street of New York. We passed by and saw the residences of Cornelius Vanderbilt, W. K. Vanderbilt, Fred Vanderbilt, John Jacob Astor, Jay Gould and Russell Sage. They are all built close to the street with very little if any lawn. The home of Cornelius Vanderbilt is surrounded by a high iron paling.

Just a word about the large stores. Lord & Taylors is considered the best. It compares in no way with Marshall Field's store in Chicago. With no selfish motive, but in all earnestness, New York cannot compare with Chicago in parks, residences, stores or means of transportation.

We went over to Bedloe's Island and up in the Statue of Liberty, 345 steps to the crown of the head. We copied the following from a bronze tablet on the statue:

A gift from the people of the Republic of France to the people of the United States. This statue of liberty enlightening the world commemorates the alliance of the two nations in achieving the independence of the United States of America attests their abiding friendship.

Castle Garden, where the emigrants used to land, is just on the lower point of the city.

From New York we went over to Brooklyn on a ferry boat to Greenwood cemetery. It covers an immense tract of land and is all hills and valleys. We visited the grave of Horace Greeley, founder of the New York Tribune; Beecher, Howe and Morse are buried here, but in the further part of the cemetery, and we did not have time to go to their graves. We also saw the place where Washington's first inauguration took place. The weather was extremely damp and cold during the whole of our stay in New York City or we would have endeavored to see more.

We left New York City on an ocean steamer called the "Manhattan" for a little sea trip to Portland, Me., a distance of about 350 miles. Left New York about 5 p. m., and all was as calm as could be going through Long Island Sound, but about 6 o'clock the next morning the boat began to rock and toss about, telling us that we had reached the open sea. A terrific wind was blowing, and the captain thought best to go back in a sheltered harbor and anchor about three miles from shore. He and some of the crew rowed ashore, with the waves lashing them on all sides, to get some word from the shipping stations, but the wires were all down, but finally, by driving five miles to another place he managed to send his message. In the afternoon they came back tired, but little the worse for their hard pull. The boat anchored about 9 o'clock in the morning and did not resume its journey until 4 o'clock the next morning, reaching Portland about 5 o'clock that evening. On the ocean we could occasionally see a whale come up and spout, and millions of ducks and sea gulls were flying about. All one day we were out of sight of land, and it seemed as though we were a long way from home.

One thing noticeable about Portland and New York, both sea ports, is that they are well guarded by forts and batteries. Even on Bedloe's Island cannons are mounted all around and ready for use at a moment's notice.

We rode through Portland from the dock to the depot and took the train for Boston, passing through Bedford, Portsmouth, Salem and Lynn. We regretted very much that we could not stay longer in Portland and see the city thoroughly, but time waits for no one, and we had already used a good deal of it so we decided to go on.

At Boston we visited the Bunker Hill monument. It is 221 feet high. We climbed 294 steps. In the top of the monument are the Hancock and Adams cannon used in the revolution.

Gen. Putnam's sword is also here as a relic. Boston Commons is a green knoll with Bunker Hill monument in the centre and Prescott's statue in front. Boston is a pretty city, but one in which a person could easily get lost. The streets are very narrow, some barely wide enough for two teams to pass. Beacon street is the principal residence street. We drove about 15 miles around the city and left Saturday evening for home, arriving in Chicago at 7:30 Monday morning.

It is pleasant to go away, but in the sentiment of the old song: "Beit ever so humble, there's no place like home."

A FAMOUS FAMILY.

MARYLAND'S MOST HONORED CITIZEN.

Charles Carroll Signed the Declaration of American Independence—His Life, His Labors and His Distinguished Descendants—Carrolls of Modern Times.

(Baltimore Letter.)

Of the 56 signers of Independence, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, is not ed as having been the wealthiest man, the only Catholic and the last survivor of the immortal band of patriots who pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor for the support of the American cause.

Charles Carroll's grandfather and namesake, the first of the name in America, came to America from Ireland in 1688, after the dethronement of James II. of England destroyed the hopes of the Catholic party in Great Britain. He was appointed Lord Baltimore's chief agent in the colony and received from the lord proprietor of Maryland grants of land amounting to 60,000 acres. He died in 1720, leaving two sons. Charles, the elder brother, inherited most of the family estate.

Charles Carroll, the third and most illustrious of his name, was born at Annapolis in 1737. At the age of eight he was sent to Europe to be educated, and after nineteen years spent in the colleges of France and England he returned home in 1764, when the colonies were in a condition of growing discontent under the exactions of the home government. His long absence abroad had not lessened his love for his native land and he threw himself heart and soul into the arena to fight for American rights. In the war of pamphlets that preceded the Declaration of Independence Charles Carroll took a leading part and was recognized as one of the ablest writers on the patriot side. Although he had more at stake than any other man in Maryland, or perhaps in the whole country he advocated the boldest measures. It was he who advised the burning of the Peggy Stewart, in broad daylight, in Annapolis harbor, when that vessel arrived there with a cargo of the obnoxious tea. It was owing to his indefatigable exertions that the Maryland delegates in Congress were instructed to vote for independence. Soon after his arrival in this country his father gave him Carrollton manor in Ann Arundel county and from that time he was known as Charles Carroll of Carrollton. He was among the first to sign the famous document which John Quincy Adams described as "unparalleled in the annals of mankind." John Hancock, in conversation with the Maryland delegate, asked him if he was prepared to put his name to the bold declaration. "Most willingly," was the reply, and Mr. Carroll took up the pen and signed it there and then. "There go a few millions," said a bystander, and all were agreed that in point of fortune none had more to risk. For twenty-five years after signing the Declaration of Independence the life of Charles Carroll was one of entire devotion to his state and country. His public career may thus be summed up: Member of the first committee of observation, twice in the convention of Maryland, twice a delegate to Congress, once chosen United States senator and four times a state died in 1819 and three years later Mr. Patterson died. A few years later Mrs. Patterson married the marquis of Wellesley, then lord lieutenant of Ireland, and thus it happened that an American became the sovereign lady of Ireland. A year later, on the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, a banquet was tendered Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, at which the following toast was proposed by Bishop England: "Charles Carroll, of Carrollton—in the land from which his grandfather fled in terror his granddaughter now reigns a Queen."

In 1828 Lady Hervey married the marquis of Camarthen, who afterward became the seventh duke of Leeds. Elizabeth, the third Miss Caton, married the Baron Stafford in 1836. The fourth Caton girl married John McTavish and their eldest son married the daughter of Gen. Winfield Scott. Of the four surviving children of this union none is married while two have entered convents.

Catherine, the second daughter of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, married Robert Goodlee Harper, one of the leading lawyers of his day. His son, Charles Carroll Harper, married in 1827 and his only surviving child, Emily Louisa, married William Clapman Pennington, of Baltimore. Their children are Robert Goodloe Harper Pennington and Clapman Pennington, both of whom are married and have children. Miss Emily L. Harper, daughter of Mr. Harper, was long one of Baltimore's most honored and distinguished lasses.

Charles Carroll, Jr., the only son of the signer, married Harriet Chew, daughter of Benjamin Chew, chief justice of Pennsylvania. Young Mr. Carroll's residence was Homewood, near Baltimore, and after the style of the family he was known as Charles Carroll, of Homewood. He had five children, one son and four daughters. The son, Col. Charles Carroll, inherited the family estate, Doughoregan manor. He married Mary Digges Lee and many children were born to them. The eldest son Charles died without issue, leaving his brother, John Lee Carroll.

John Lee Carroll was born, in 1830, in Baltimore, and was educated at Georgetown College, at St. Mary's College, Baltimore, and in the law department of Harvard University. He practiced law for several years in Baltimore, but after marrying Miss Anita Phelps, daughter of Royal Phelps, of New York, he removed to that city. In 1861 he returned to Maryland and shortly afterward purchased Doughoregan manor from his brother, and has since resided there except during the winter, which he generally spends in Washington. He has always taken a great interest in politics, has served several terms in the Maryland Senate and in 1875 was elected to the governorship. Since his term expired he has not been in public life.

One of Mr. Carroll's sons is Royal Phelps Carroll, the well-known yachtsman and owner of the Navahoe, one of the speediest of racers and cruisers.

New Methods of Extracting Gold.

The real cause of the recent notable increase in the production of gold has been almost entirely the marked improvements made in the processes of mining. To the engineers rather than to the gold hunters and the explorers credit should be given for the immense production of the precious metal in new fields.

It is this very fact that makes the promise of a great gold yield for many decades to come most solid and trustworthy. There is reason to believe that science will yet render possible the extraction of vast quantities of gold from ore, which has been passed by as not worthy of attention, and the refuse or tailings of old diggings may be made to yield another harvest to miners.

Rainfalls That Do Not Reach Earth.

In the Colorado desert they have rainstorms during which not a drop of water touches the earth. The rain can be seen falling from the clouds high above the desert, but when the water reaches the strata of hot, dry air beneath the clouds it is entirely absorbed before falling half the distance to the ground. These strange rainstorms occur in regions where the shade temperature often ranges as high as 128 degrees Fahrenheit.—Kansas City Star.

Made to Look Like Marble.

It is said that by giving plaster figures a bath in a certain way they may be made to look like marble. The bath is made by putting two generous quarts of water into an agate kettle with one ounce of pure curd soap and one ounce of white beeswax, cut into small pieces; let this dissolve over a slow fire, and when all the ingredients are thoroughly mixed, tie fine twine around the figure and dip it into the liquid. Take the figure out and hold it in the air for five minutes, and then again dip it into the liquid; let the figure dry for a few days, and then rub it with a soft flannel; a brilliant gloss will be produced.

An Important Difference.

To make it apparent to thousands, who think themselves ill, that they are not afflicted with any disease, but that the system simply needs cleansing, is to bring comfort home to their hearts, as a costive condition is easily cured by using Syrup of Figs. Every Man to His Trade.

There is an amusing story told of two ministers who were crossing a loch in the highlands in company with a number of passengers. A storm came on. One of the passengers was heard to say: "The two ministers should begin to pray, or we'll be drowned." "Na, na," said a boatman "the little one can pray if he likes, but the big one must tak' an oar."—New York Tribune.

Master Louis, the 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George Comstock, was given a surprise party by a number of his young friends at the home of his parents Monday evening. After indulging in various enjoyable social games a lot of "goody-goodies" were served. Those present were: Willie Solt, Willie Kirby, Alec and Fred Boehmer, Emil Meyer, Rex Henderson, Beulah Otis, Ida Hutchinson, Carrie Schaefer and Mable Wagner.

The best Christmas gift of all can be found at Lyon & Healy's great Holiday Musical Sale. Everything known in musical instruments is displayed in their six great floors, corner Wabash Ave. and State St. and an acceptable present may be found to suit every purse. No one should neglect making this display a visit. Visitors are freely welcome. Musical Boxes sell from 50 cents to $250, and from $1.00 to $10.00 the choice of musical gifts is fairly bewildering. A copy of the Lyon & Healy Annual containing a fine new two step and a charming ballad free to every caller. Lyon & Healy, Wabash Ave. and Adams Sts., Chicago.

E. W. Riley settled with the insurance company for his loss on personal property August 30th, for the full amount covered—$725. Mr. Riley carried $565 insurance on grain, etc., and $150, on farm implements. The company claimed that he lost only $5. worth of farm implements and offered him only that amount for the $150 insurance he carried. Mr. Riley was compelled to serve "proof of loss" on them and they took nearly the whole length of time—60 days—they reserve to make good the losses, before they paid him, thereby avoiding litigation.

Maj. C. W. Hawes, head clerk for the Modern Woodmen of America, has just issued a leaflet embodying the latest statistics of the order. It shows that there were 200,350 beneficiary members in good standing on the 30th day of September, the number of camps being 4,350, and that the insurance in force at that date was $319,911,500 which is more than twice the membership and twice the insurance that the order had in 1892. This is a growth truly phenomenal and we believe unparalleled. It is also a healthy growth as indicated by the average age of members, this being 32.96 years, while in 1892 the average was 37.61. The cost of management is also steadily decreasing. It was never higher than $1.62 per capita annually; it is now down to 66 cents. The mortality statement shows that the highest number of assessments levied in one year was eleven, and that in the twelve years of its existence it has paid 3,395 death claims, the total disbursements to beneficiaries amounting to $7,040,485. The amount disbursed in 1892 was $695,000; in 1895 $1,408,166. The average is now $175,000 paid out in death benefit every month, and the average cost of carrying insurance is but $4.95 on every $1,000 a year. The death rate to 1,000 members is but 5.05
