Lily Foreman Passes Away.

Lily C. Foreman, only daughter of George and Minnie Foreman, was born a few miles from Barrington on July 19, 1890, and died May 2, 1899, aged 8 years, 9 months and 13 days.

Deceased was a lovely, promising and bright child, kind, affectionate and a general favorite with her numerous playmates and associates. She was a faithful and consistent member of the M. E. Sabbath school, taking great interest in the studies she pursued. She was the bright gem of the household, never knowing a want that was not quickly supplied, and the parents are almost prostrate over their irreparable loss.

The immediate cause of death was diphtheria, complicated with kidney trouble, her illness being only of a few days' duration.

Funeral services were held at her late home at 1:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Rev. T. E. Ream, pastor of the M. E. church, and Rev. Menzel, pastor of St. Paul's Evangelical church, officiating. A large concourse of relatives and friends were present to aid in the last sad rites and mingled their tears with those of the grief stricken parents and children.

Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

Art in Song.

The college boys of the Northwestern University, who sang at the M. E. church last Friday evening, revealed to their delighted audience that rare art which in song captivates the human heart and sentiment. For about one and a half hours the young men held the audience spell-bound by singing and speaking. Mr. Ellinwood, the elocutionist, is a master, not only in song, but also in elocution. So delighted was the audience that heard these talented young men that an immediate request was made for their return. It is a rare thing to hear such a concert.

The quartette will again give a concert at the M. E. church Saturday evening, May 13. A new program will be arranged, while it is expected they will be called upon to repeat some selections which were given before. Admission, 15 and 25 cents.

PHANTOM SHIP

—OR—
The Flying Dutchman.

—BY CAPTAIN MARRYAT.

"I must say," replied Philip, "that, whenever I have fallen in with that vessel, mischief has ever followed."

"Vessel! why, what was there in that vessel to frighten you? She carried too much sail, and she has gone down."

"She never goes down," replied one of the seamen.

"No! no!" exclaimed many voices; "but we shall if we do not run back."

"Pooh! nonsense! Mynheer Vanderdecken, what say you?"

"I have already stated my opinions," replied Philip, who was anxious, if possible, to see the ship one more in port, "that the best thing we can do is to bear up for Table Bay."

"And, captain," continued the old seaman who had just spoken, "we are all determined that it shall be so, whether you like it or not; so up with the helm, my hearty, and Mynheer Vanderdecken will trim the sails."

"Why! what is this?" cried Captain Barentz. "A mutiny on board of the Vrow Katrina? Impossible! The Vrow Katrina! the best ship, the fastest in the whole fleet!"

"The dullest old rotten tub!" cried one of the seamen.

"What!" cried the captain; "what do I hear? Mynheer Vanderdecken, confine that lying rascal for mutiny."

"Pooh! nonsense! he's mad," replied the old seaman. "Never mind him; come, Mynheer Vanderdecken, we will obey you; but the helm must be up immediately."

The captain stormed, but Philip, by acknowledging the superiority of his vessel, at the same time that he blamed the seamen for their panic, pointed out to him the necessity of compliance, and Mynheer Barentz at last consented. The helm was put up, the sails trimmed, and the Vrow Katrina rolled heavily before the gale. Toward the evening the weather moderated, and the sky cleared up; both sea and wind subsided fast; the leaking decreased, and Philip was in hopes that in a day or two they would arrive safely in the bay.

As they steered their course, so did the wind gradually decrease, until at last it fell calm; nothing remained of the tempest but a long heavy swell which set to the westward, and before which the Vrow Katrina was gradually drifting. This was a respite to the worn-out seamen, and also to the troops and passengers who had been cooped below or drenched on the main-deck.

The upper-deck was crowded; mothers basked in the warm sun, with their children in their arms. The rigging was filled with the wet clothes, which were hung up to dry on every part of the shrouds, and the seamen were busily employed in repairing the injuries of the gale. By their reckoning, they were not more than fifty miles from Table Bay, and each moment they expected to see the land to the southward of it. All was again mirth, and everyone on board, except Philip, considered that danger was no more to be apprehended.

The sun had set before Philip had quitted the gangway and gone down below. Commending himself, and those embarked with him, to the care of Providence, he at last fell asleep; but before the bell was struck eight times, to announce midnight, he was awakened by a rude shove of the shoulder, and perceiving Krantz, the second mate, who had the first watch, standing by him.

"By the heaven above us, Vanderdecken, you have prophesied right. Up—quick! The ship's on fire!"

"On fire!" exclaimed Vanderdecken, jumping out of his berth—"where?"

"The main hold."

"I will up immediately, Krantz. In the meantime, keep the hatches or rig the pumps."

In less than a minute Philip was on deck, where he found Capt. Barentz, who had also been informed of the case by the second mate. In a few words all was explained by Krantz; there was a strong smell of fire proceeding from the main hold; and, on removing one of the hatches, which he had done without calling for any assistance, from a knowledge of the panic it would create, he found that the hold was full of smoke; he had put it on again immediately, and had only made it known to Philip and the captain.

"Thanks for your presence of mind," replied Philip; "we have now time to reflect quietly on what is to be done. If the troops and the poor women and children knew their danger, their alarm would have much impeded us; but how could she have taken fire in the main hold?"

"I never heard of the Vrow Katrina taking fire before," observed the captain; "I think it is impossible. It must be some mistake—she is—"

"I now recollect that we have in our cargo several cases of vitriol in bottles," interrupted Philip. "In the gale they must have been disturbed and broken, I kept them above all, in case of accident; this rolling, gunwale under, for so long a time, have occasioned one of them to fetch way."

"That's it, depend upon it," observed Krantz.

"I did object to receive them," stating that they ought to go out in some vessel which was not so incumbered with troops, so that they might remain on the main deck; but they replied that the invoices were made out and could not be altered. But now to act. My idea is to keep the hatches on, so as to smother it if possible."

"Yes," replied Krantz, "and at the same time cut a hole in the deck just large enough to admit the hose and pump as much water as we can into the hold."

"You are right, Krantz; send for the carpenter and let him to work. I will turn the hands up, and speak to the men. I smell the fire now very strong; there is no time to lose. If we can only keep the troops and the women quiet we may do something."

Two hours later, however, the fire had gained such headway that they had to take measures to abandon the ship.

The column of fire now ascended above the mainmast—licking with its forked tongue the topmast rigging—and embracing the mainmast in its folds; and the loud roar with which it ascended proved the violence and rapidity of the combustion below, and how little time there was to be lost. The lower and main decks were now so filled with smoke that no one could remain there; some poor fellows, sick in their cots, had long been smothered, for they had been forgotten. The swell had much subsided, and there was not a breath of wind; the smoke which rose from the hatchways ascended straight up in the air, which, as the vessel had lost all steerage way, was fortunate. The boats were soon in the water, and trusty men placed in them; the spars were launched over, arranged by the men in the boats and lashed together. All the gratings were then collected and firmly fixed upon the spars for the people to sit upon; and Philip's heart was glad at the prospect which he now had of saving the numbers which were embarked.

CHAPTER XVI.

But their difficulties were not surmounted—the fire now had communicated to the main deck, and burst out of the port holes amidships—and the raft which had been forming alongside was obliged to be drifted astern, where it was more exposed to the swell. This retarded their labor, and, in the meantime, the fire was making rapid progress; the mainmast, which had long been burning, fell over the side with theurching of the vessel, and the flames out of the main deck ports soon showed their points above the bulwarks, while volumes of smoke were poured in upon the upper deck, almost suffocating the numbers which were crowded there; for all communication with the fore part of the ship had been for some time cut off by the flames, and everyone had retreated aft. The women and children were now carried on to the poop, not only to remove them further from the suffocating smoke, but that they might be lowered down to the raft from the stern.

It was about 4 o'clock in the morning when all was ready, and by the exertions of Philip and the seamen, notwithstanding the swell, the women and children were safely placed on the raft, where it was considered that they would be less in the way, as the men could relieve each other in pulling when they were tired.

After the women and children had been lowered down, the troops were next ordered to descend by the ladders; some few were lost in the attempt, falling under the boat's bottom and not reappearing; but two-thirds of them were safely put on the berths they were ordered to take by Krantz, who had gone down to superintend this important arrangement. Such had been the vigilance of Philip, who had requested Capt. Barentz to stand over the spirit room hatch, with pistols, until the smoke on the main deck rendered the precaution unnecessary, that not a single person was intoxicated, and to this might be ascribed the order and regularity which had prevailed during this trying scene. But before one-third of the soldiers had descended by the stern ladder, the fire burst out of the stern windows, with a violence that nothing could withstand; spouts of vivid flame extended several feet from the vessel, roaring with the force of a blowpipe; at the same time the flames burst through all the after ports of the main deck, and those remaining on board found themselves encircled with fire and suffocated with smoke and heat. The stern ladders were consumed in a minute and dropped into the sea; the boats which had been receiving the men were obliged also to back astern from the intense heat of the flames; even those on the raft shrieked as they found themselves scorched by the ignited fragments which fell on them as they were enveloped in an opaque cloud of smoke, which hid from them those who still remained on the deck of the vessel. Philip attempted to speak to those on board, but he was not heard. A scene of confusion took place which ended in great loss of life. The only object appeared to be who should first escape, though, except by jumping overboard, there was no escape. Had they waited, and (as Philip would have pointed out to them) have one by one thrown themselves into the sea, the men in the boats were fully prepared to pick them up; or had they climbed out to the end of the lateen mizen-yard, which was lowered down, they might have descended safely by a rope, but the scorching of the flames which surrounded them and the suffocation from the smoke overpowered, and most of the soldiers sprang over the taffrail at once, or as nearly so as possible. The consequence was, that there were thirty or forty in the water at the same time, and the scene was as heart-rending as it was appalling; the sailors in the boats dragging them in as fast as they could—the women on the raft, throwing to them loose garments to haul them in; at one time a wife shrieking as she saw her husband struggling and sinking into eternity; at another, curses and execrations from the swimmer who was grappled with by the drowning man, and dragged with him under the surface. Of eighty men who were left of the troops on board at the time of the bursting out of the flames from the stern windows, but twenty-five were saved. There were but few seamen left on board with Philip, the major part having been employed in making the raft or manning the three boats; those who were on board remained by his side, regulating their motions by his. After allowing full time for the soldiers to be picked up, Philip ordered the men to climb out to the end of the lateen yard which hung on the taffrail, and either to lower themselves down on the raft if it was under, or to give notice to the boats to receive them. The raft had been dropped further astern by the seamen, that those on board of it might not suffer from the smoke and heat; and the sailors, one after another, lowered themselves down and were received by the boats. Philip desired Capt. Barentz to go before him, but the captain refused. He was too much choked with smoke to say why, but no doubt that it would have been something in praise of the Vrow Katrina. Philip then climbed out; he was followed by the captain, and they were both received into one of the boats.

The rope, which had hitherto held the raft to the ship, was now cast off, and it was taken in by the boats; and in a short time the Vrow Katrina was borne to leeward of them, and Philip and Krantz now made arrangements for the better disposal of the people. The sailors were almost all put into boats, that they might relieve one another in pulling; the remainder were placed on the raft, along with the soldiers, the women and the children. Notwithstanding that the boats were all as much loaded as they could well bear, the numbers on the raft were so great that it sunk nearly a foot under the water when the swell of the sea poured upon it; but stanchions and ropes to support those on board had been fixed, and the men remained at the sides, while the women and children were crowded together in the middle.

As soon as these arrangements were made the boats took the raft in tow, and, just as the dawn of day appeared, pulled in the direction of the land.

The Vrow Katrina was by this time one volume of flame; she had drifted about half a mile to leeward, and Capt. Barentz, who was watching as he sat in the boat with Philip, exclaimed: "Well, there goes a lovely ship—a ship that could do everything but speak. I'm sure that not a ship in the fleet would have made such a bonfire as she has. Does she not burn beautifully—nobly? My poor Vrow Katrina! perfect to the last; we never shall see such a ship as you again. Well, I'm glad my father did not live to see this sight, for it would have broken his heart, poor man."

Ball Bearings Did It.
Bicycles were invented centuries ago, but it required the magic touch of the Nineteenth century inventor to make the "wheel" a most useful vehicle, instead of a mere toy.

Ball bearings did it. It was a case where the improvement has proved greater than the original invention. The principle that reduces friction to a minimum in a bicycle is applicable to all machinery, and the cost is the only obstacle in the way of what will be known in history as the "Light Draft Era" in mechanics. Millions of dollars have been spent in this direction. The Deering Harvester Company, of Chicago, solved the problem, as far as grain binders and mowers are concerned, by equipping their machines with roller and ball bearings in 1891.

Other manufacturers in this line have since followed with several kinds of experimental roller bearings, but the Deering machines are still alone in the field with ball bearings of the bicycle pattern.

The Deering Company's annual catalogue for 1899 contains some very interesting historical matter on this subject, fully illustrated. The book also describes the largest factory in America and gives the latest news on the subject of harvesting machinery. Send for one; it's free.

The warm weather is beginning to bring the city people out. From present indications this is going to be the best year we have ever seen for summer boarders. Times are better in the city and all who have a little spare cash will no doubt use it in this manner. Of course we do not predict that Wauconda will get them all, but through our boatman, Otto Waelti, assisted by the hotel keepers and those who keep summer boarders, our little burg has been well advertised, and with the best of accommodations offered Wauconda is sure to get her share.

Would Not Suffer So Again for Fifty Times Its Cost

I awoke last night with severe pains in my stomach. I never felt so badly in all my life. When I came down to work this morning I felt so weak I could hardly work. I went to Miller & McCurdy's drug store and they recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It worked like magic and one dose fixed me all right. It certainly is the finest thing I ever used for stomach trouble. I shall not be without it in my house hereafter, for I should not care to endure the sufferings of last night again for fifty times its price.—G. H. WILSON, Livoryman, Bargettsown, Washington Co., Pa. This remedy is for sale by A. L. Waller, Barrington, and A. S. Olms, Palatine.

Horse Racing and Socialism.

In the Militar Wochenblatt, a leading German military organ, Herr Von Ploetz recommends horse racing as a panacea for socialism. He says that the reason why there is no socialism in England is that they encourage horse racing there and that "the love of the sport is the connecting link between all classes of men, enabling the poor to comprehend the necessity for a difference of fortune." Following out Herr Ploetz's idea, it is said that gambling on horse racing is increasing in Germany at a tremendous rate, though so far no diminution of socialism has been noticed.

The Frigate Bird.

Many sailors believe that the frigate bird can start at daybreak with the trade winds from the coast of Africa and roost the same night upon the American shore. Whether this is a fact or not has yet to be determined, but it is certain that the bird is the swiftest of winged creatures and is able to fly, under favorable conditions, 200 miles an hour.

THE PLANO is the simplest and best.

Plano Jones Mower
Longest Lived and Lightest Draft Mower in the world. It has no vibration.

no Noise, no Lost Power.
No Cog Wheels to wear out.
Free from Side Draft and free from Neck Weight.
No backing up to start in the grass.

The following are a few of the points why the Plano machines are the best over other makes:
In the Plano Jones Lever Binder the knotter contains only 16 pieces, while the Deering has 44, McCormick 28 and the Champion 33.
It is the only binder put up with lever power, carrying spring, friction clutch reel and jointless main frame.
The main drive wheel is two inches wider than any other made, consequently the machine will not mire or settle down in soft or loose ground.

Farmers should examine this machine before placing their order.

GEN. MACARTHUR LOVES THE THICK OF BATTLE.

Col. J. H. Weber of Chicago has this to say of Gen. MacArthur, "General MacArthur is certainly made of the finest fighting material. He loves war and fighting and the danger and experience they bring. When he enlisted for the rebellion in Milwaukee in 1862 he was a green lad of 19, but it did not take him long to demonstrate his fitness to command. Stone River was our first severe engagement, and in it MacArthur showed great bravery, coolness and fighting ability. To such a degree was this so that he greatly endeared himself to the boys of the brigade. It so happened that the command practically devolved upon him, and he made himself in that fight the idol of the brigade. That night I bunked with him, and he told me he had felt that many of the men disliked him because of his squeaky voice and that he had determined as soon as the occasion arose in battle to give them proof that he was worthy of their good opinion if not of their friendship. We were not surprised when, after the war, he enlisted with the regular army and made fighting his business.

A KANSAS COLONEL'S DARING DEED.

This picture of "Scrapping Fred" Funston, colonel of the Twentieth Kansas, is probably the first to appear in any paper of the United States from an original photograph. Colonel Funston, now leader of the famous "Kansas Demons," had just returned from Cuba when this picture was taken.

The United States has sent thousands of brave men to meet the Filipinos, but Colonel Funston appears to be the most daring and heroic of them all. It was he who with twenty volunteers swam the river at Malolos, under fire, and captured seventy rebels. He was the first man to enter Malolos. What he did at Bagbag River is told by the Associated Press in this manner: Colonel Frederick Funston called for volunteers to cross the river, and the colonel himself, Lieutenant Ball, a private of Company K, a private of Company E, Trumpeter Barsfield and Corporal Ferguson of Company I crawled along the iron girders.

While this was going on the men of Company K, from the ditch, were fursillading the trenches in the endeavor to divert attention, but the Filipinos got the range from a trench down the river, and their bullets soon spattered the water under the structure. Having reached the broken span, the small but valorous party of Americans slid down the shore and crawled up the bank, the little colonel leading the way to the trenches, revolver in hand, while the few remaining Filipinos bolted.

Colonel Funston said afterward: "It wasn't much to do. We knew they could not shoot straight, and that our boys would attend to them while we were crossing."

LATEST ILLINOIS NEWS.

The San Jose Scale.

The legislature of Illinois has lately passed an act the provisions of which require the state entomologist to treat once thoroughly, at the expense of the state, all orchards and other fruit plantations infested by the San Jose scale, which he has reason to believe became so infested before 1899. Any premises which became infested later must, under the law, be treated by the owner to the satisfaction of the entomologist; or, if by the entomologist, half the expense of the operation must be borne by the owner of the infested property. It is consequently to the interest of every owner of an orchard who has any reason to suppose it possible that his property has become infested, to inspect it thoroughly at once, and to send promptly to the state entomologist, S. A. Forbes, at Urbana, Ill., specimens of twigs or bark of a suspicious character, in order that if this destructive insect is present the fact may at once be ascertained. The presence of the San Jose scale may be suspected when the bark of the twig, branch or trunk of a tree or shrub is spotted or covered with a thin, unhealthy looking crust of about the color of the bark itself or a little lighter, and which when scraped off with the finger nail comes away in small, thin scales. If rubbed with the finger such an infested surface will have a greasy feel, owing to the crushing of the bodies of the minute insects of which the crust is mainly composed.

Suit by Murderer Brunot.

Henry Brunot, murderer, instituted suit at Pana the other morning to set aside the deed made April 21, by which he conveyed to his mother, Emma Brunot, the forty-acre farm left him by his father at his death. Brunot represents that he is a minor, therefore the deed is void. Mrs. Brunot has mortgaged the land to Attorney McQuigg and Banker Schuyter for $1,000, with which she employed counsel for her son's defense. Young Brunot also instituted suit against the heirs of Jane Brunot, the aunt he murdered, for a portion of the land which she owned at the time he killed her, claiming that under the law he is entitled to one-fifth of his deceased aunt's property. There has been a decided change in Brunot since he was imprisoned. A continuous guard is being kept over him for fear he will commit suicide by hanging himself with the bedclothing.

At the end of the fifth inning Manager Altman of Lincoln put Woodward, the professional, in the pitcher's box, and Manager Garner called his men from the field. The hooting mob began to assail the visitors, all of whom were struck with missiles.
