COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

Large Audience Turns out at Palatine to Listen to the Program.

Commencement week—the most important of Palatine's annual events—has past and gone, leaving pleasant memories behind. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered by Rev. F. B. Hardin in the Methodist church last Sunday morning. The church was tastily decorated for the occasion and the address was listened to by a good sized audience. Mr. Hardin was at his best on this occasion and his address was full of earnest appeal to the young people of the class, urging upon them the necessity of endurance, will power and above all the help that cometh from above.

The class day exercises by the Freshmen were held on the school campus Wednesday evening, but owing to the threatening weather, the audience was not as large as is usual on this occasion. The program was an excellent one in both arrangement and delivery and all felt well paid for their attendance. Some of the parts were worthy of special mention, but too much space would be required to do the participants justice. The class promises to make an interesting commencement next year.

The eighth grade exercises were held in their school room Thursday afternoon and an interesting program was presented to the scholars and a number of visitors.

The graduation exercises of the High school class were held in the Methodist church last evening. The church was taxed to its utmost capacity as usual, many friends of graduates from other towns being noticed in the assembly. The edifice was tastily decorated in the class colors, flowers being abundant. The exercises passed off very smoothly and each member of the class did himself honor. Professor Charles Sherman received his customary Palatine greeting which seemed to inspire him to his best efforts, and his violin productions had their usual fascinating effect upon the audience. He was ably accompanied by Miss Ryslyn Fehrenbach on the piano. Sabey's orchestra, of Chicago, rendered several selections and the skilful playing produced a marvel of sweet strains which captivated the audience. The address was made by Professor W. D. Smyser, principal of the Hunting Avenue school, and was an excellent one and full of sound advice to the class. Professor Smyser is a ready speaker and convinces one that he is earnest in his plea for higher education. C. D. Taylor, president of the board of education, then presented the diplomas in his usual pleasing way. After the closing piece by the orchestra was played the friends of the graduates crowded about them and offered congratulations.

A NOBLE WOMAN. (Clara W. Harrison.)

The noble, true-hearted woman is the one whom we all delight to have near us. She is always ready to help the weak; to raise the fallen, to comfort the suffering. It was characteristic of woman that she should have been the first to build and endow a hospital. It has been said that wherever a human being is in suffering his sighs call a woman to his side. How true this is. What would our poor wounded soldiers do when injured on the battlefield, unable to help themselves, if there were no hospitals, or some temporary place of that kind provided for them? What would they do without the loving and patient attendance of some gentle woman in the hour of severe pain—perhaps on their death bed? How many women in this last war have left their homes and gone to Cuba to give their assistance and even their lives, if need be? Not only in this war, but in all others have the women of our land shown themselves as brave and noble as the men, if only the chance be given them.

THE GOOD OLD TIMES. (Mattie Hodgkins.)

What a sense of beauty the Grecians possessed. They took delight in the truly beautiful things of life. They made it their highest aim to cultivate this sense and then to fairly revel in the glories of poetry, scripture and painting. Ah, that we could truly recognize the greatness the grandeur of these things. Imagine a party of young Americans standing before the great statue of Olympian Zeus, sculptured by the renowned Phidias, commenting upon its size and perhaps joking about some of its outlines. Do they recognize the elevating worth of it? No! no, they cannot; there is not the supreme sense of beauty in their souls which alone could make them fully appreciate the grandeur of such a work. We, unlike the ancients, do not enjoy the true delicate touch of fineness of art. We do not take the time to time to read poetry, to study between the lines, and thus to enjoy one of the grandest things in language and thought.

WHAT THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY HAS DONE. (Clarence J. Bennett.)

What the Democratic party has done is seen in the tracing of that party from its origin. When the colonists had finished that long and bloody fight for liberty, it was their desire to become one country, under one law. Regardless of the danger of enacting the same kind of government as that from which they had just been made free, they gathered together the best men of the country to write out a code of laws which, as nearly as possible, should suit all. Several plans were brought up, but the one which suited all the best was, with few exceptions, the work of James Madison, whose views were purely democratic. Has it ever been said that the constitution of this United States was not a great work? No! It has come down to us with very few changes. The policy of Adams should have been to follow a good example and to have looked toward the liberty of the people. When he was inaugurated he began to give all the power possible to the central government and everything, during his time, pointed toward an oligarchy. Who could have been a more able, learned and honest man for the presidency than Thomas Jefferson?

THE VALUE OF GOOD LITERATURE. (Henry C. Wildhagen.)

Is there anything in the world that is better, more elevating and more useful to any human being than good literature? I know your answer will be, there is not; because the civilization and progress of any nation de-

DESTROYED BY WIND AND FIRE

Town of New Richmond, Wis., Almost Wiped Out.

HUNDREDS KILLED OR HURT.

FLAMES IN THE RUINS COMPLETE CYCLONE'S WORK.

FULL PARTICULARS ARE DELAYED.

Town Was the Home of 2,000 People, of Whom It Was Estimated from 250 to 500 Were Killed Outright or Badly Injured—Neighboring Cities Hasten Relief Trains and Surgeons to the Stricken Community—Work of the Storm Elsewhere.

The city of New Richmond, Wis., the home of 2,000 people, has been destroyed by a cyclone, and between 250 and 500 persons killed and injured.

Details of the disaster are lacking, as wires were leveled by the storm and all trains are delayed by washouts, which have carried away miles of track and many bridges.

Early Monday evening the operator at Burkhardt station, near New Richmond, reported that many people were killed and injured. This was confirmed an hour later when a courier arrived at North Wisconsin Junction with the information that New Richmond had been wiped off the map, and that the list of fatalities and casualties would be very heavy.

J. A. Carroll, a traveling man, who was in the Nicolle house at New Richmond when the storm broke, has arrived at Stillwater, Minn. He saw the funnel-shaped cloud as it came up the principal street, and took refuge in the basement of the hotel, which was completely wrecked, together with every other business house in the city.

In terrible sheets of rain following the cyclone Mr. Carroll and his comrades succeeded in recovering the proprietor, Charles McKennon, wife and one child from the debris, and they also removed the laundry girl, who was so seriously injured that she will probably die. They also removed two men named Barrett and Newall, who were very severely injured.

Mr. Carroll drove to Stillwater for North Wisconsin Junction, destroying the wires, unroofing barns, houses, out-buildings, haystacks, etc., all along its path. Fifteen feet of track on the Omaha one mile west of this place is washed out, and the track east of here is reported to be buried in sand and mud at several points. It is rumored that Mrs. Dave Hefferon, living north of Burkhardt, was killed.

"The full extent of the damage is not known. The following places are known to be damaged: House on one farm and all buildings except house on another farm of Henry Madison; the barn belonging to Ed Daily, Julius Beers' barn, Dave Hefferon's barn, all buildings belonging to Mr. Lacy, north of Burkhardt; small flour mill at Burkhardt; barn and house of Mr. Beebe, near same place; corn crib and windmill belonging to Frank Wade were smashed into kindling wood. The roof of Graves' barn was blown off."

The following dispatch from Hudson tells of the destruction wrought there as follows:

"The cyclone passed through the country here at about 5:30 p. m. It formed in a waterspout four miles south of Hudson, on Lake St. Croix. It was witnessed by hundreds of people, and seemed to follow the lake and to be making directly for the city, but about two miles south it veered to the east, and left the lake and crossed the country. It was about twenty rods wide and destroyed everything in its track. The first building struck was over on the farm of F. C. Mattison. One edge of the storm struck his buildings, twisting his barn out of shape and throwing his windmill some rods. It then struck the Gridley farm. The family, seeing it coming, fled for a large stone quarry about twenty rods from the house, where they remained in safety until it passed. The house is a small brick one and held to the foundation, but the angles were torn from the roof. The cyclone veered to the north, leaving the buildings unharmed, but tearing large oak trees three feet in diameter out by the roots and twisting them into every conceivable shape.

"About one-half mile northeast from there" it struck the buildings of H. S. Mattison. Just before the storm reached the place the family and farm help fled for the cellar. The cellar door had just closed when the crash came. This place was directly in the line of the storm, and not a building, tree, wagon or piece of machinery is left whole. The house was completely swept from its foundation and nothing here, it being impossible for them to get through. The Omaha is washed out near Hudson, the Milwaukee & St. Paul has lost several bridges and considerable track near Wabasha, Minn., and in Wisconsin; the Burlington is blocked by a washout near Trempealeau, Wis., and the Wisconsin Central line extends only beyond Stillwater, Minn. There are also a number of blocked places on the various branch lines.

TRAIN CONDUCTOR BRINGS NEWS.

Direct Report Received from the Scene of the Cyclone.

The through Wisconsin Central trains succeeded in reaching Minneapolis, having come through New Richmond at an early hour.

The tracks were all clear save where the contents of a lumber yard were scattered over them.

Conductor Gavin says he took twelve refugees to St. Paul with him. When the train came through the fires were burning fiercely, and the air was so full of smoke it was difficult to tell the extent of the disaster. The central part of the town, however, was wrecked. A fire engine had arrived from a neighboring town, and was doing its best to check the flames.

There was no medical assistance at that time, one of the local doctors having been killed and the other having had both legs broken.

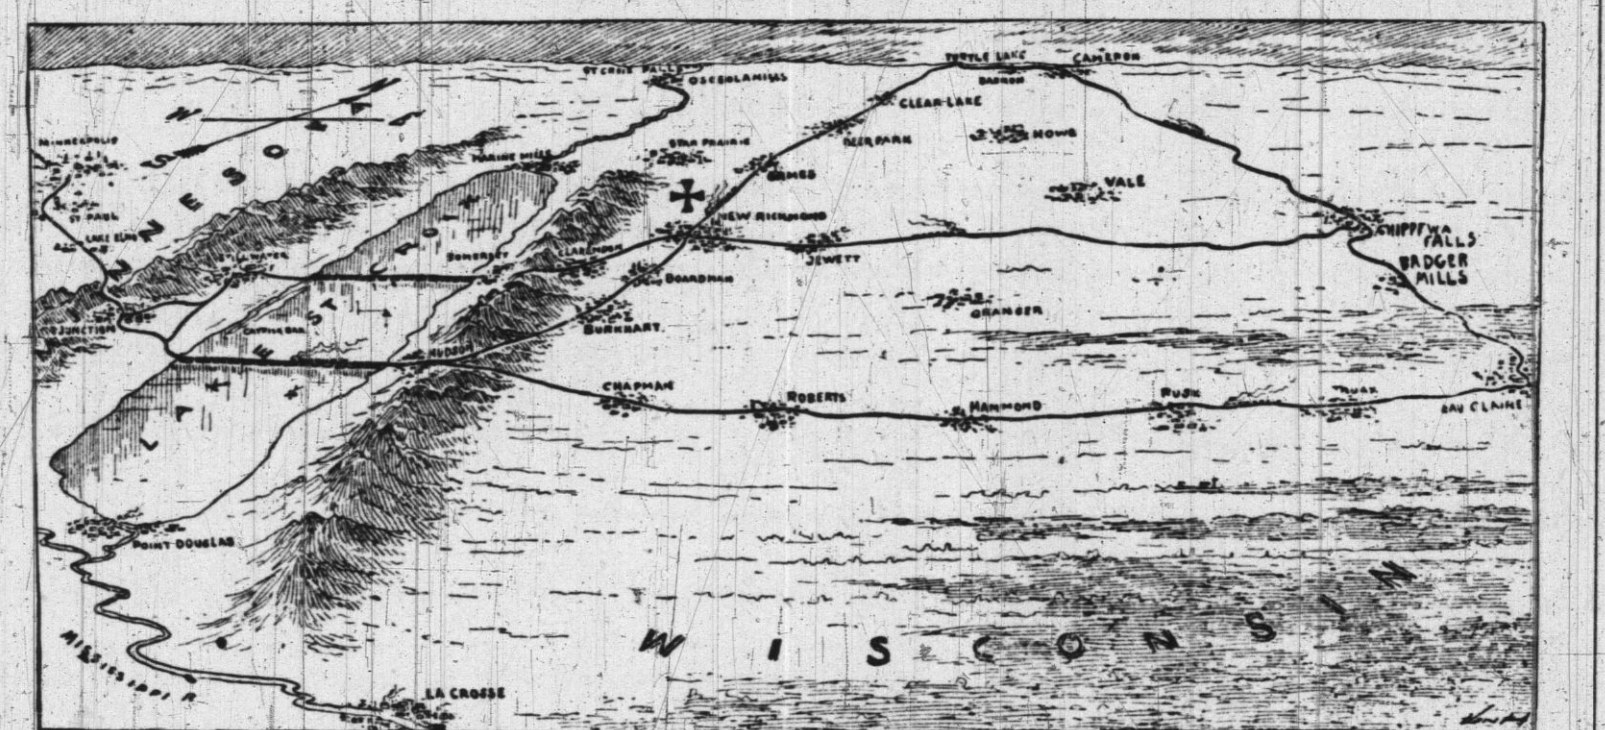

The Wisconsin Central and the Omaha roads had brought in large numbers of country visitors for the circus, and Mr. Gavin says there must have been from 2,500 to 3,000 people in town.

He brought an order for 300 coffins, but this of course was simply an estimate of the possible dead by the local relief committee.

St. Paul, Minn., June 14.—A Dispatch reporter, just returned from New Richmond, Wis., places the number of dead at 200, and the injured at about 1,000. He says that of the entire population of 2,500, only a few can be found unhurt. The town is almost totally destroyed.

Plumbers Quit in Cleveland.

Cleveland, Ohio, Dispatch: Over 200 steamfitters, representing every plumbing shop in town, are on a strike for higher wages and for a uniform scale for Cleveland workmen. The men want an eight-hour working day with $3 per day for steamfitters and $1.50 for helpers.

WISCONSIN'S CYCLONE REGION VIEWED FROM THE CLOUDS.

relief, and a train with doctors left there at midnight.

A messenger also reached Burkhardt from New Richmond and telegraphed for doctors and help, saying a large number were killed and wounded. The railroad officials endeavored to get out a special train from Burkhardt, but on account of the several washouts were unable to do so, and the doctors and many others drove across the country as fast as horses could safely carry them.

Three traveling men who drove from River Falls to Hudson were struck by the storm and the rig was torn to pieces, one man named Vollman having one of his legs broken.

A relief train left St. Paul at midnight for New Richmond, carrying a number of St. Paul physicians.

A courier who arrived at North Wisconsin Junction from Boardman reports that place in ruins and many persons killed and injured.

Boardman is a small town on the Duluth-Superior branch of the Northwestern road, and is half-way between Hudson and New Richmond. The town has but a few hundred inhabitants.

There has been no communication with the city of Hastings, Minn., since the storm, and there are grave fears that it, too, was in the cyclone's path. Reporters who went there have not been heard from.

A dispatch from North Wisconsin Junction gives this account of the storm in that region:

"The cyclone was first observed at Hudson, coming up Lake St. Croix. It passed first to the east of the town and moved northeasterly, crossing the track of the Omaha, a mile east of remained but the floor which covered the people in the cellar. Not one of them was harmed; Every piece of furniture was carried for fods and literally torn into shreds. Besides the house there were two large barns, machine sheds and outbuildings, and all were destroyed. Forty cattle and about 100 sheep cannot be found at this hour.

The storm passed on to the northeast, destroying everything in its wake, and was followed by rain torrents and terrible lightning. The Gridley barn, which was left standing, was struck by lightning by the later storm and burned. Telegraph and telephone wires are all blown down and adjoining towns cannot be heard from."

Was a Thriving City.

New Richmond is on the Wisconsin Central and the Duluth-Superior branch of the Omaha road. It is thirty-six miles due east of St. Paul and is in the heart of the richest farming section of St. Croix county. The town has about 2,000 people and is quite a business center. It is near Willow river, which furnishes power for several large saw and grist mills.

New Richmond is one of the oldest and prettiest towns in western Wisconsin. It has two principal streets, one running north and south and the other east and west. At the junction of these streets are the larger business houses. Outside the business center the street running east and west is the principal residence street. It is about three miles long, bordered on both sides by large trees, making a beautiful driveway, lined with pretty dwellings.

Owing to washouts along their lines the various Chicago trains were held

The Dutch Are with Us.

New York, Telegram: The American proposal, for rendering private property inviolable at sea, is strongly supported by the Dutch delegates to the peace conference, according to the correspondent of the Herald at The Hague, who has had interviews with prominent members of the commission. Germany, however, the correspondent adds, is indifferent and France strongly opposes it. Russia supports the French view, especially because she considers herself bound in duty to back her ally. The fate of the American proposal, therefore, is very uncertain, although Germany probably in the end will be found siding with the United States and Great Britain, which may possibly turn the scale.

Incendiaries Are Suspected.

Columbus, Ind., Special: At 3 o'clock Monday morning a fire broke out in Elizabethtown, Bartholomew county, and for a time it was thought that the entire city would be consumed. The flames were not extinguished until seven hours after the fire started. The entire loss is hard to estimate, but an aggregate of it all is between $20,000 and $50,000. The loss is heavily insured. Incendiaries are suspected to have started the fire.

Think Kruger Will Yield.

London, Cable: Joseph Chamberlain, the colonial secretary, was not present in the house of commons Monday to answer questions concerning the Transvaal. Consequently the situation is practically unchanged. The cables, however, substantiate the view that President Kruger is preparing to yield.

LATEST ILLINOIS NEWS.

Health Tests Permissible.

Springfield, Ill., special: In reply to inquiry from J. A. Egan, secretary of the state board of health, Attorney-General Akjn has furnished an opinion in which he says that when knowledge of information comes to the board of live stock commissioners of the existence of tuberculosis or other contagious or infectious disease among domestic animals, he is of the opinion that the board may resort to the tuberculin test, or any other test known to medical science for the purpose of ascertaining or demonstrating the existence of such disease. He is also of the opinion that the state board of health has the same power, but he doubts the power of the board to make such tests, except by consent of the owner of the cattle, in cases where there is no reasonable ground to believe in the existence of tuberculosis. He thinks the board must have some reasonable grounds for suspecting the existence of that disease before it should interfere with the property rights of the cattle owners.

Professor Accused of Theft.

Galesburg, Ill., special: Prof. Lloyd Willis, a member of the faculty of Hedding college, Abingdon, has been indicted by the grand jury for burglary. Two weeks ago Prof. Willis was arrested, charged with robbing the house of Prof. J. P. Cushing of Knox college, Galesburg, while the family was away. Prof. Willis, it was charged, filled up several boxes with books, lectures, manuscripts, etc., and carried them to a hiding place. The grand jury got hold of the facts and returned an indictment. In the meantime Willis has disappeared. He taught elocution and English, was a prominent Y. M. C. A. worker and is a young man of good family.

Illinois Tax Law Attacked.

Springfield, Ill., Special: The state Supreme court has formally been asked to pass upon the constitutionality of the new revenue law. The law is attacked for three reasons, as follows:

1. Because it is purely an amendatory act and was passed by the legislature in disregard of the provisions of the constitution governing amendatory legislation.
2. Because it is special legislation and in relation to subjects upon which special legislation is inhibited by the constitution.
3. Because important provisions necessary to make the maintenance of the act are not included within its title.

Will Condemn Building Site.

Freeport, Ill., dispatch: The post-office site question is uppermost in the minds of the citizens here. Although quite a number of properties were offered the government has ordered condemnation proceedings against a site owned by Jacob Kline, a prominent citizen. He does not want to sell and today telegrams and petitions were sent to Washington asking that another site be secured. The action of the government is severely condemned here.

Decatur, Ill., Special: At the morning session of the Illinois Grain Dealers' association officers were elected as follows: President, E. R. Ulrich, Springfield; vice-president, Thomas Costello, Maroa; secretary, Barton S. Tyler, Decatur; treasurer, Frank M. Pratt, Decatur. An amendment to the constitution was introduced, providing for local associations.

Revenue Law Hearing.

Springfield, Ill., Special: The Supreme court Wednesday issued an order allowing the filing of the petition for a writ of mandamus in the case of the people versus Ryan, with instructions to appear on the first day of the next term of court. The case involves the question of the validity of the present revenue law.

NEW PRIZE RING CHAMPION.

California Pugilist Defeats the Veteran Fitzsimmons.

FIGHT LASTS ELEVEN ROUNDS.

Jeffries Displays Wonderful Skill and Agility, Combined with Tremendous Hitting Power—Ex-Champion Admits He Was Fairly Beaten.

James Jeffries of Los Angeles, Cal., won the pugilistic battle at the Coney Island Athletic club from Robert Fitzsimmons in the eleventh round.

The fight was the most important in the pugilistic world since the meeting of Corbett and Fitzsimmons at Carson City March 17, 1897.

As Fitzsimmons held the heavy-weight championship of America and there was no serious claimant to the title in any other part of the world Jeffries by his victory comes into a fairly well established claim of being the world's champion.

Jeffries is 24 years of age; was born in Columbus, Ohio, and is the son of a clergyman.

It was the first defeat Fitzsimmons had sustained in twenty-three contests since coming to America, not counting the contest which he lost to Sharkey on an alleged foul, and he was a strong favorite in the betting.

When the men went into the ring Fitz looked to be about 170 pounds in weight, while Jeffries was easily 206.

The actual time of fighting was 31 minutes and 32 seconds. The time of the last round was 1 minute and 32 and 2-5 seconds.

After the fight Fitzsimmons said: "The best man won. I fought my hardest, but he reached me in spite of all I could do. Jeffries made a great fight—far greater than I believed he could ever do. I have no excuses to make. I knew it was a hard game after the second round, and toward the last I was too much dazed to avoid him. I tried to win and did my best. I take off my hat to J. J. Jeffries, heavy-weight champion of the world."

"The inclosed telegram has just reached me here. I have never said to anybody that silver is a secondary issue. I have said that inasmuch as the next congress was almost certain to pass a currency bill, the currency phase of the money question was likely for the time being to attract a large share of public attention. (Whether the government or the banks shall issue our currency). The money question has lost none of its importance, and I do not think any backward step in this question will be taken by the Democrats in 1900. There will, however, be other prominent issues—the trusts and imperialism."

FARMERS AND THE RAILROAD.

The politician, with an eye single to the emoluments and advantages of the public office it is his ambition to fill, has found that one of the most effective means to that end—in the matter of securing votes—is to arouse the suspicion in the popular mind that capital, as manipulated by the "souless corporation" is gradually but surely placing the public in a bondage the ultimate condition of which will be abject slavery. "If you wish to make powerless the elements that are evolving such an eventuation," he says, "put me and my friends in office and we will enact laws for your protection." The people have given heed and as a result the statute books, both state and federal, are filled with laws for the "protection of the people" against the "aggression of capital," as manipulated by various kinds of corporations, which by their absolute failure to effect the results promised by the politician, have driven a large class of unthinking people "corporation-mad" and furnished unscrupulous corporation speculators reasons for the cynical conclusion that no earthly power can hold them accountable for their operations—and as to the higher power, "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." The unscrupulous promoter of gigantic speculative "trusts," by his operations, and the demagogue hungry for public office, by his inflammatory talk, are hurrying the popular mind into a sort of hysteria likely to throw the body politic into convulsions that will work serious harm to capital engaged in legitimate operations and to the large mass of people whose well-being depends on the unhampered opportunity for the unlimited diversification of these operations which a healthy economic state demands under present day conditions. With the power lost to discriminate between what is vicious and what is vital the people in their frenzy will bury themselves beneath the ruins of our social system by tearing out the prows as did Samson in his blind fury by hauling down the pillars on which the temple rested. The wealth of America rests on its agricultural interests. This is shown from the fact that when the farmer has good crops and a demand for his product in the foreign markets that will take up the surplus over and above domestic consumption, the nation is prosperous. The garden spot of the agricultural interest of this country is the Mississippi valley and the most productive nook of this garden is Iowa, whose crops are worth millions annually and whose farmers ship their products into the eastern markets by the million dollars. The crops of Iowa, beyond what would be needed for mere local consumption, would rot in the fields but for the railroads that cover the state with a network, bringing the markets of the world to our very doors. And there would be no railroads here but for the crop. The farmers and the railroads therefore, have developed Iowa, and the limit of development is not in sight yet. The farmer is essential to the prosperity of the railroads of Iowa and without the railroads the farmer would be wearing homespun, eating black-bread and raising enough generally for the wants of his family with no place to send what he had over. Instead of getting together and fixing up a "modus vivendi" based on the mutuality of their interests, the farmer has listened to the mouthings of the demagogue until he is inclined to look on the railroad as a robber, and railroad officials have made reprisals on the farmer to pay the expense of heading off the influence of the granger element of the legislature, or of fighting the enforcement of preposterous regulations in the statutes for which this element is responsible. So an armed truce prevails instead of the businesslike understanding that could be arrived at but for the meddlesome politician of the Jim Weaver stamp who has made a good thing, in more ways than one, by keeping these two industries suspicious of each other. This situation prevails more or less all over the country and is due wholly to "politics." The railroad is the pet grievance of a certain grade of politician and a certain stamp of labor agitator throughout the country, and when out of hearing of the farmer they accuse the granger as a class of being as grasping as they charge corporations to be. As a matter of fact the farmers and the railroads have built up this country. No two classes of industry are so mutually dependent, for the one could not prosper or even exist without the other. On this foundation the prosperity of the country rests. The farmer handles his crops on a very narrow margin of profit. His expenses are larger both for labor and machinery and one bad crop eats a big hole in the savings of former years if it doesn't put a mortgage on the place. Outside the rise in the value of farm land owing to the rapid filling up of the country by means of railroads, the farmer for all his hard work does not realize more than from 2 to 3½ per cent on the investment, on the average—an amount that is probably as large as the per cent of profit made by the combined railroads of the country, whose disbursements oftentimes, under the most careful management, exceed the income. Like the poor crop a serious railroad accident will often, in the damage to property and personal injuries for which the road is held responsible, eat up the profit of the company implicated for several years. In fact bankruptcy of the road often follows such a disaster. The combined railroads of the country have a pay roll including officers and clerical staff of about $2,000,000 a day. The maintenance of the road beds costs $75,000,000 annually besides $35,000,000 for the purchase of rails, ties and sleepers, and $15,000,000 for the construction of new bridges. Last year they spent for fences, sign boards, signal and watch towers, $35,000,000, and $8,500,000 for printing and advertising. They pay about $50,000,000 in taxes and $10,000,000 annually for legal services exclusive of the claims for personal injuries and damage to property, which is estimated at about $5,000,000 annually. All this does not include value of rolling stock, stations, etc., and repairs thereon. Probably 2,000,000 people are directly employed by the railroads at wages in every grade that make the positions much sought after. Furnishing the supplies of various kinds of railroads, provides employment to another army of people and adds tremendously to the volume of business of the country. And so narrow is the margin between income and outgo, and so dependent are the railroads on the general prosperity of the country, that, during the hard times between '93 and '96, the road that didn't go into the hands of receivers, or at least fall to pry dividends, was a curiosity. The employees of railroads used to be very imperious in their demands, and under the lead of agitators like Debs there have been many strikes inflicting untold damage to the roads and country in general and taking the bread and butter from thousands of mouths. It has been found that arbitration between the employe and the roads will amicably adjust all differences of opinion that through the agency of the walking delegate formerly led to strikes, distress and bitter feelings on both sides. The farmers and the railroads do not get credit for the vast contributions they make to the prosperous conditions in this country, and no two classes of industry have so often without reason been at loggerheads. Many railroad organizations, notably the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, have thrown aside the walking delegate and adopted the policy of arbitration on business principles, with the enactment of laws and regulations which sound, cool-headed judgment recognizes to be mutually beneficial. Along these lines the differences between the people generally on the one hand and corporations generally on the other must be adjusted. Hot headedness of the one must be discounted and the rapacity of corporation pirates, whose hands are against the corporations engaged in legitimate operations as well as the people, must be repressed. Congress and state legislatures filled with flannel mouthed politicians elected as the result of rip-roaring anti-corporation campaigns, with lobbies filled with the agents of corporations who know how to make a lamb out of the roaring lion and to convert hostile legislation into statutory dead letters, are hurrying on a head end collision that will have disastrous results. The people must relegate demagogues to the rear as sensible labor organizations have done with walking delegates, and take hold of the matter free from the prejudices of partisan politics. This is the only safe way out.—From the Daily Republican, Iowa City, Iowa, May 15, 1899.

OF A BRILLIANT FAMILY.

There are often amusing confusions of Mr. Arnold Henry Savage Landor, the celebrated English traveler, who wrote that brilliant book "In the Forbidden Land," telling of his tortures in Tibet, with his grandfather, Walter Savage Landor, the celebrated poet, who died about thirty years ago, at the advanced age of 90. Until recently there were two Walter Savage Landors living, the uncle and the brother of the explorer. Walter Savage Landor the second died recently at Geneva, and by his death the family estates, Ipsley court in Warwickshire, Llanthony abbey in Wales, and various properties on the continent have passed to the explorer's father, Mr. Charles Savage Landor, who has for many years resided at Florence.

Mr. A. H. Savage Landor is a man of astonishing attainments; he has recently lectured before learned societies in three other languages besides English—French, German and Italian. In Italy he has received the highest honors for his services to exploration. When he was lecturing in French before the Geographical Society of Geneva, four or five hundred people had to be turned away from the doors.

When he lectured at Stuttgart, before the Imperial Geographical Society of Stuttgart, which is inferior to none in Germany in importance, the king and queen of Wurtemberg, the prince of Saxe-Weimar and five other members of the royal families were present among the great audience of 1,500 people. Mr. Landor lectured in German with great fluency on that occasion, though he had not spoken German for twelve years previously. His linguistic attainments are very remarkable. He can speak seven or eight European languages, besides the Asiatic languages which he had to acquire for his travels.

The Old Woman.
 The world has just been celebrating the eightieth birthday of an old woman. No new woman of our time has received such genuine homage from mankind. In fact, the peoples of all nations seem to take some kind of honest delight in showing their respect for an old woman who is not brilliant, who is not advanced, who does not imitate men, whose chief glory is in her womanly virtues and her feminine conservatism, and who persistently represents to a mad world the best qualities which in all ages have won for women the devotion, the valor and the loyalty of men. Her very reticence delights the race. She does not talk. Men turn to her on her throne to rest their ears from the clamor of shrill voices in the market place and in the clubroom. She avoids publicity, although she is on a national pedestal. She seldom takes the initiative, but she brings all her unimpaired womanliness to the side of peace. She has kept away from the public forum, although her duties demand her there. She is unperturbed by the restlessness of her sex. But her influence, like that of a sovereign mother, goes out over the world gently, but irresistibly, and so present is it in its gracious femininity that it has closed up the wounds of ages and bridged over the chasms of international strife, and today the sons of men who fought her government to the death throw up their hats wherever the sun shines and shout with an old time chivalry, "Long live the queen!" It is a great thing to preserve at this time such an old fashioned example of the only divine feminine that ever gets into practical affairs. It is something indeed to be reminded that chivalry and sentiment have not perished utterly from the earth when the best blood of a stalwart nation is ready to offer itself in her service, to lie down wounded in trenches and crawl back home well paid if she but pin a ribbon on the poor shattered body.

A Turkish View of Divorce.
 The Turkish minister at Washington, who, by the way, is a great favorite with the society ladies there, has confided to some of them his painful regrets at the prevalence of divorce in America, and there is reason to believe that he attributes it in great measure to the fact that the Americans do not profess the true faith. There can be no doubt that from his point of view, if Mohammedanism were made the state religion of his country, divorces would cease. That seems so obvious that it is useless to argue it. But it seems that some of the society women in Washington twitted the ambassador on the Turkish harem, whereupon that distinguished diplomat gravely informed them that the Turkish harem exists in his country in just about the same degree as Mormonism exists in the United States. And this is a fact that is not generally known outside of Turkey. The harem is a state privilege, like the lord mayor's show in London. It is frowned upon everywhere by the best Turkish society. What is perhaps still more curious and not a whit less true is that polygamy in Turkey is being killed slowly but surely by the influence of woman herself. This is the testimony of the very best writers on that country. The only question that remains to be answered is, Will not divorce increase as polygamy disappears?

A great and needed female reform has been started by a brave woman in Boston. Its purpose is to provide women with pockets. Having studied the subject, she has come to the conclusion that civilization will be advanced materially and woman will take her stand properly by man's side as his equal if she can only have pockets in her dress to put her hands and other things into. A tailor made woman has suffered for the want of this luxury for years, and she has put up with it because the tailor told her it was a necessity. It goes without saying that a woman would not put her money in a book for safe keeping and then forget which book she put it in if she had a pocket. Nor would she put her change in her lap at a lunch counter and spill it all over when she gets up, making a dozen people crawl under benches and counters to recover it. Man would undoubtedly have a larger appreciation of woman if she had pockets, and, now that she has gone out into the world and demands a night key, it is very absurd to see her diving into a reticule among cream, caramels, chewing gum, visiting cards, face powder, chocolate eclairs and matinee tickets to find it. One thing is sure—she could not leave her pockets in the seat or in the car and ask somebody to go back and get them.

Captain Boynton, a young man of San Francisco who started out to walk as nearly round the world as the ocean would permit, is on his return. His experiences ought to be very stimulating to other young men. His bet was that he would shin round the planet without borrowing any money and live entirely on hospitality. His record of the latter is very interesting. He was fired on by Ute Indians, starved for two days and a half without food or water in the American desert, was found in a dead faint by a hospitable Mexican, was nearly killed by a railroad accident while going through a tunnel on foot, was poisoned in Spain, was stabbed in Portugal, was arrested as an American spy in Germany, was married to a Scotch girl he had never seen before in Glasgow, was publicly stoned at Marbella, was cut with a knife in Colon and arrested by the police, and was imprisoned in Valencia. But he won his bet, whatever it was.

Some years ago a party of practical jokers set a couple of darkies to work whitewashing the city hall in New York, and it took a squad of policemen to stop them. But this practical joke isn't in it with the contractor who, in painting the ironwork of the new Washington bridge over the Harlem river, also painted all the fine bronze medallions black. It will now cost $1,800 to scour the paint off. This is a joke on New York that New York has said very little about, and perhaps the less said about it the better.

Miss Rosa Storker of Evansville, Ind., is said to have died from the results of cake walking. She was celebrated locally as the most graceful cake walker, and appears to have given a great deal of her time to the profession. She was taken suddenly ill after one of these exhibitions, and the physician pronounced the disease peritonitis, caused by cake walking. This is the second case of the kind that has occurred at Evansville. The girls of Evansville must have a system of cake walking unknown to the rest of the country.

Four deaths on the wheel were recently reported within a week. There will now be an outcry against the fatality of bicycle riding. But sensible persons will understand that overexertion on horseback or even in walking is quite as dangerous to men and women who have not the strength to undergo such exercise. A man with heart disease who undertakes a century run has little more discretion than the man who selects a barber with St. Vitus' dance to shave him.

The Spanish war may not, as Mr. Howells declares, have produced any stirring literature, but no one can deny that it has produced an after crop of superb schemes. The latest is put forth by Major McClave, who proposes that the country shall buy the 11 miles of Palisades on the Hudson and erect thereon a monument to Admiral Dewey opposite the tomb of Grant and connect the two by means of a monster bridge. It is somewhat remarkable that whenever New York gets hold of a scheme of this size it immediately proposes to make the country pay for it.

The home coming of Admiral Dewey is to be made a genuinely national welcome. All the pet schemes of the politicians who wish to exploit themselves by hanging upon the admiral's coattails have fallen flat. The people have fought shy of them and have now taken the matter into their own hands. If one-tenth of the population of the United States would give 10 cents each to the fund, the amount would reach $600,000, and that is the kind of fund that will best honor Admiral Dewey, because it represents the spontaneous gratitude of the common people.

Syracuse having unwisely extolled a woman in its possession who is a drummer for a wagon manufacturer, several other cities have come promptly to the front with women of enlarged spheres. Utica has a woman blacksmith. Dayton, O., produces a woman plumber; Frankfort, Ky., is proud of a female sexton, and now Milwaukee boasts of a woman who sings bass, and New Orleans has a lady prizefighter.

WHAT TO READ.
Some Prominent Chicagoans Express Opinions.
 In these enlightened times every person who pretends to keep in touch with the progress of the world must read a first-class daily metropolitan newspaper. They who would select the best should be guided by the opinions of prominent newspaper-men who know. Read the following:
 "There is no question as to the position occupied by The Chicago Tribune. Its enterprise has been too often demonstrated. As a local and American news-gathering institution it has no superior and few equals. In the matter of foreign cables, no other paper west of New York can be compared to it. These are the things, of course, that go to make a complete and great newspaper." CARTER H. HARRISON.
 "The Chicago Tribune is the best newspaper in the world. I consider its make up and facilities for gathering news unequalled, although I do not agree with it politically." WASHINGTON HESING.
 "The Chicago Tribune is beyond question the greatest newspaper in the West, if not in the country."

The Woodmen initiated ten more new members last Tuesday evening and this time they didn't invite the Ringland camp but they did invite the goat, which arrived at about 7 o'clock and, after eating his supper, was ready for business, at least you would have thought so had you heard the noise. We come to the conclusion that Wauconda Woodmen can make as much noise as Ringwood or any other lodge if only provided with the necessary equipments. We would like to say one thing to the Woodmen, we wish you good luck and hope to see you prosper, but hereafter leave that goat at Ringwood and have some respect for the people below you.

In the Plano Jones Lever Binder the knottter contains only 16 pieces, while the Deering has 44, McCormick 28 and the Champion 33.
It is the only binder put up with lever power, carrying spring, friction clutch reel and jointless main frame.

PHANTOM SHIP

The Flying Dutchman.

—BY CAPTAIN MARRYAT.

CHAPTER XXIII.

"I have then seen him," said Philip, after he had lain down on the sofa in the cabin for some minutes to recover himself, while Amine bent over him. "I have at last seen him. Amine! Can you doubt now?"

"No, Phillip; I have now no doubt," replied Amine, mournfully; "but take courage, Phillip."

"For myself, I want not courage—but for you, Amine—you know that his appearance portends a mischief that will surely come."

"Let it come," replied Amine calmly; "I have long been prepared for it, and so have you."

"Yes, for myself; but not for you."

"You have been wrecked often, and have been saved; then why should not I?"

"But the sufferings."

"Those suffer least who have most courage to bear up against them. I am but a woman, weak and frail in body, but I trust I have that within me which will not make you feel ashamed of Amine. No, Phillip, you will have no walling; no expression of despair from Amine's lips; if she can console you, she will; if she can assist you, she will; but come what may, if she cannot serve you, at least she will prove no burden to you."

"Your presence in misfortune would unnerve me, Amine."

"It shall not; it shall add to your resolution. Let fate do its worst."

"Depend upon it, Amine, that will be ere long."

"Be it so," replied Amine. "But, Phillip, it were as well you showed yourself on deck; the men are frightened and your absence will be observed."

"You are right," said Phillip; and rising and embracing her, he left the cabin.

Phillip, on his return to the deck, found the crew of the vessel in great consternation. Krantz himself appeared bewildered—he had not forgotten the appearance of the Phantom ship off Desolation harbor, and the vessels following her to their destruction. This second appearance, more awful than the former, quite unmanned him; and when Phillip came out of the cabin he was leaning in gloomy silence against the weather bulkhead.

"We shall never reach port again, sir," said he to Phillip, as he came up to him.

"Silence! silence! The men may hear you."

"It matters not; they think the same," replied Krantz.

"But they are wrong," replied Phillip, turning to the seamen. "My lads, that some disaster may happen to us after the appearance of this vessel is most probable; I have seen her before more than once, and disasters did then happen; but here I am, alive and well; therefore it does not prove that we cannot escape as I have before done. We must do our best and trust in heaven. The gale is breaking fast, and in a few hours we shall have fine weather. I have met this Phantom ship before, and care not how often I meet it again. Mr. Krantz, get up the splints—the men have had hard work and must be fatigued."

The very prospect of obtaining liquor appeared to give courage to the men; they hastened to obey the order, and the quantity served out was sufficient to give courage to the most fearful and induce others to defy old Vanderdecken and his whole crew ofimps. The next morning the weather was fine, the sea smooth and the Utrecht went gayly on her voyage.

Many days of gentle breezes and favorable winds, gradually wore off the panic occasioned by the supernatural appearance; and if not forgotten it was referred to either in jest or with indifference. They now had run through the Straits of Malacca, and entered the Polynesian archipelago. Phillip's orders were to refresh and call for instructions at the small island of Boton, then in possession of the Dutch. They arrived there in safety, and after remaining two days, again sailed on their voyage, intending to make their passage between the Celebes and the island of Galago. The weather was still clear and the wind light; they proceeded cautiously, on account of the reefs and currents, and with a careful watch for the piratical vessels which have for centuries infested those seas; but they were not molested, and had gained well up among the islands to the north of Galago when it fell calm, and the vessel was borne to the eastward of it by the current. The calm lasted several days, and they could procure no anchorage; at last they found themselves among the cluster of islands near to the northern coast of New Guinea.

The anchor was dropped and the sails furled for the night; a drizzling rain came on, the weather was thick, and watches were stationed in every part of the ship, that they might not be surprised by the pirate proas, for the current ran past the ship at the rate of eight or nine miles per hour, and these vessels, if hid among the islands, might sweep down upon them unperceived.

It was 12 o'clock at night when Phillip, who was in bed, was awakened by a shock; he thought it might be a proa running alongside, and he started from his bed and ran out. He found Krantz, who had been awakened by the same cause, running up undressed. Another shock succeeded, and the ship careened to port. Phillip then knew that the ship was on shore.

The thickness of the night prevented them from ascertaining where they were, but the lead was thrown over the side and they found that they were lying on shore on a sand-bank, with not more than fourteen feet of water on the deepest side, and that they were broadside on with a strong current pressing them further up on the bank; indeed, the current ran like a millrace, and each minute they were swept into shallow water.

On examination they found that the ship had dragged her anchor, which, with the cable, was still taut from the starboard bow, but this did not appear to prevent the vessel from being swept further up on the bank. It was supposed that the anchor had parted at the shank, and another anchor was let go.

Nothing more could be done till day-break, and impatiently did they wait till the next morning. As the sun rose the mist cleared away, and they discovered that they were on shore on a sand-bank, a small portion of which was above water, and round which the current ran with great impetuosity. About three miles from them was a cluster of small islands with cocoa trees growing on them, but with no appearance of inhabitants.

"I fear we have little chance," observed Krantz to Phillip. "If we lighten the vessel the anchor may not hold, and we shall be swept further on, and it is impossible to lay out an anchor against the force of this current."

"At all events we must try; but I grant that our situation is anything but satisfactory. Send all the hands aft."

The men came aft, gloomy and dispirited.

"My lads," said Phill, "why are you disheartened?"

"We are doomed, sir; we knew it would be so."

"I thought it probable that the ship would be lost—I told you so—but the loss of the ship does not involve that of the ship's company—nay, it does not follow that the ship is to be lost, although she may be in great difficulty, as she is at present. What fear is there for us, my men? The water is smooth—we have plenty of time before us; we can make a raft and take to our boats; it never blows among these islands, and we have land close under our lee. Let us first try what we can do with the ship; if we fail, we must then take care of ourselves."

The men caught at the idea and went to work willingly; the water-casks were started, the pumps set going, and everything that could be spared was thrown over to lighten the ship; but the anchor still dragged, from the strength of the current and bad holding ground, and Phillip and Krantz perceived that they were swept further on the bank.

Night came on before they quitted their toil, and then a fresh breeze sprang up and created a swell, which occasioned the vessel to beat on the hard sand; thus did they continue until the next morning. At daylight the men resumed their labors, and the pumps were again manned to clear the vessel of the water which had been started, but after a time they pumped up sand. This told them that a plank had started, and that their labors were useless; the men left their work, but Phillip again encouraged them, and pointed out that they could easily save themselves, and all that they had to do was to construct a raft which would hold provisions for them, and receive that portion of the crew who could not be taken into the boats.

After some repose the men again set to work; the topsails were struck, the yards lowered down and the raft was commenced under the lee of the vessel, where the strong current was checked. Phillip, recollecting his former disaster, took great pains in the construction of this raft, and aware that as the water and provisions were expended, there would be no occasion to tow so heavy a mass, he constructed it in two parts, which might easily be severed, and thus the boats would have less to tow, as soon as circumstances would enable them to part with one of them.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Night again terminated their labors, and the men retired to rest, the weather continuing fine, with very little wind. By noon the next day the raft was complete; water and provisions were safely stowed on board; a secure and dry place was fitted up for Amine in the center of one portion; spare ropes, sails and everything which could prove useful, in case of their being forced on shore, were put in. Muskets and ammunition were also provided, and everything was ready, when the men came aft and pointed out to Phillip that there was plenty of money on board, which it was folly to leave, and that they wished to carry as much as they could away with them. As this intimation was given in a way that made it evident they intended it should be complied with, Phillip did not refuse; but resolved in his own mind that when they arrived at a place where he could exercise his authority, the money should be reclaimed by the company to whom it belonged. The men went down below, and while Phillip was making arrangements with Amine, handed the casks of dollars out of the hold, broke them open and helped themselves—quarreling with each other for the first possession as each cask was opened. At last every man had obtained as much as he could carry, and had placed his spoil on the raft with his baggage, or in the boat to which he had been appointed. All was now ready—Amine was lowered down and took her station; the boats took in tow the raft, which was cast off from the vessel, and away they went with the current, pulling with all their strength to avoid being stranded upon that part of the sandbank which appeared above the water. This was the great danger which they had to encounter, and which they very narrowly escaped.

They numbered eighty-six souls in all; in the boats there were thirty-two; the rest were on the raft, which, being well built and full of timber, floated high out of the water, now that the sea was so smooth. It had been agreed upon by Phillip and Krantz that one of them should remain on the raft and the other in one of the boats; but at the time the raft quitted the ship they were both on the raft, as they wished to consult, as soon as they discovered the direction of the current, which would be the most advisable course for them to pursue. It appeared that as soon as the current had passed the bank it took a more southerly direction toward New Guinea. It was then debated between them whether they should or should not land on that island, the natives of which were known to be pusillanimous yet treacherous. A long debate ensued, which ended, however, in their resolving not to decide as yet, but wait and see what might occur. In the meantime the boats pulled to the westward, while the current set them fast down in a southerly direction.

Night came on and the boats dropped the grapnels with which they had been provided, and Phillip was glad to find that the current was not near so strong and the grapnels held both boats and raft. Covering themselves up with the spare sails with which they had provided themselves and setting a watch, the tired seamen were soon fast asleep.

"Had I not better remain in one of the boats?" observed Krantz. "Suppose, to save themselves, the boats were to leave the raft."

"I have thought of that," replied Phillip, "and have therefore not allowed any provisions or water in the boats; they will not leave us for that reason."

"True; I had forgotten that."

Krantz remained on watch, and Phillip retired to the repose which he so much needed. Amine met him with open arms.

"I have no fear, Phillip," said she; "rather like this wild, adventurous change. We will go on shore and build our hut beneath the cocoa trees and I shall repine when the day comes which brings succor and releases us from our desert isle. What do I require but you?"

"We are in the hands of One above, dear, who will act with us as He pleases. We have to be thankful that it is no worse," replied Phillip. "But now to rest, for I shall soon be obliged to watch."

IN A FIERCE ENGAGEMENT.

Severely Contested Battle Fought Near Las Pasas.

FILIPINOS MAKE A STAND.

Full Strength of the American Land Forces, Aided by Gunboats, Fall to Completely Subdue the Rebels—Heavy Losses Inflicted on Both Sides.

The bloodiest battle of the war was fought June 13 at Las Pinas, south of Manila, the entire command under Gen. Lawton engaging a large and well-organized force of Filipinos. The enemy made a desperate and aggressive fight, and at 5 o'clock Gen. Lawton had only been able to drive them back 500 yards to the Zapote river, where they are firmly entrenched. The loss on both sides is heavy, that of the Americans being conservatively estimated at sixty. The enemy's death roll will reach into the hundreds. For the first time artillery was used on both sides, the American field guns engaging a Filipino battery concealed in the jungle. The warships also took part in the battle and their guns must have inflicted heavy loss on the enemy. Companies F and I of the Twenty-first infantry were nearly surrounded by a large number of insurgents, but the Americans cut their way out with heavy loss.

The United States turret-ship Monadnock and the gunboats Helena and Zafiro trained their batteries on Bacoor and the rebel trenches near Las Pinas all the morning. Bacoor was once on fire, but the natives stopped the spread of the flames.

It is reported on good authority that Gen. Luna and his aid have been assassinated, presumably by Aguinaldo's direction.

It Works Like a Grain Binder.

The only way to bind corn is the reasonable, sensible, horizontal way: that is, as nearly after the principle of a grain binder as is possible. Those who have used the Deering Horizontal Corn Binder know that binding corn by machinery is no longer an experiment. This machine has roller and ball bearings, it is light for two horses and free from side draft, and it does not scatter loose ears all over the field.

POETIC RETRIBUTION.

The English Waiter Gets Even with the German Interloper.

At last the English waiter is avenged upon his German rival, says the London Telegram. Not for the first time in history has a race of conquerors suffered from their conquests and brought back with them the seeds of servitude from the nations whom they have overcome. The home-keeping countrymen of Hans and Fritz are feeling the consequences of the triumphs of their brethren in this country in a very unpleasant way. Too late they are beginning to recognize that the reflex influence of English manners is corrupting the native simplicity and fettering the pristine freedom of the Teutonic race. Hotel and restaurant keepers in Germany have begun to insist on their shaving off their mustaches, and the demand has invoked an indignant protest against what is described as "a custom imported from England." "We are robbed!" exclaim the waiters, in a strain of impassioned eloquence, "of our rights as German men. Why does not the public interfere? We claim to wear a mustache, like every other free man." The answer of the restaurateurs—a bald appeal to convention—that "it is the custom of waiters to be clean-shaven," is denounced as "nothing but servile submission to the English," and, no doubt, to a German waiter, accustomed to a society in which the wearing of a mustache by coachmen and other private domestic servants is not at all unusual, the new prohibition might well appear to be a slavish following of the foreigner. Here, however, the hotelkeeper's rule would be considered reasonable, and we are old-fashioned enough to trust that it will continue to be upheld—if necessary, by judicial decision. A clean-shaven waiter is, to our thinking, as indispensable an adjunct of a refined repast as a clean napkin, and their opposites are almost equally unappetizing. It is all very well to describe a mustache as an "ornament" to the face; but that depends. There are mustaches and mustaches; and to sanction them in the attendants at a dinner table is to run an unnecessary risk of the unsightly. In the razor there is always safety. Besides, if a mustache is to be allowed to a waiter, why not a beard—even the beard of old age? Why not assent at once to the incongruity of being waited upon by patriarchs? True, it may be urged that the same sort of objection was raised to the wearing of mustaches and beards by the clergy and that it was overruled. Yes; but are we sure that the right cause prevailed? Is the church stronger than it was when its ministers could be correctly described by the old appellation of "shavelings"? May we not, on the contrary, attribute some of the present lawlessness and insubordination of the clergy to their early beginnings of license?

OUR MAN AT APIA.

Admiral Albert Kautz, who threatens to bring on another Coghlan incident with Germany, is the commander of the American naval forces in Samoa. His letters to his near relatives in this country severely criticising the German consul general have embarrassed the navy department. Kautz is one of the oldest officers in the service. He entered Annapolis in 1854 and was graduated in 1858. His record during the war with the south is exceptionally brilliant. It was he who negotiated the first exchange of prisoners authorized by President Lincoln and his cabinet. He served on Farragut's staff and was in the thick of the attack on Forts Jackson and St. Philip, on the Chalmette batteries, and in the taking of New Orleans. It was he who hauled down the confederate flag from the city hall of New Orleans and ran up the stars and stripes in their stead. He was made a commodore in 1897 and an admiral since the outbreak of the war with Spain. It is not probable that the man with which he seems to be afflicted will draw out more than a mere caution from the navy department.

What He Wanted.

Weight of a Skeleton.

The bones of an average man's skeleton weighs twenty pounds. Those of a woman are probably six pounds lighter.

Gen. A. S. Kimball, Depot Quartermaster of the U. S. Army, in New York city, has sent to Lyman McCarty, Assistant General Passenger Agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in New York, a letter of thanks for the prompt movement of troops that were ticketed over the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad during the past year. He says that many of these movements were made on short notice and his department had too frequently to rely upon insufficient and sometimes inaccurate data. He realized that under such circumstances the company was placed in an embarrassing position and the extraordinary efforts made by the line to give satisfaction in every respect merited and received his fullest appreciation.

Strength of a Grizzly.

A hunter tells some wonderful stories about the strength of grizzly bears. He saw one that had had one of its forepaws shot useless, use the other to draw up its weight of eleven hundred pounds up a precipice, where it seemed as if the feat were impossible. He tells also of cows knocked over by a single blow from the forepaw of a bear; but perhaps his most surprising story is of an occurrence that he witnessed three summers ago. He says: "I spent the season in the coast mountains near Hudson bay, and one moonlight night I saw a big grizzly bear in the act of carrying a dead cow home to her cub. I had a position on a mountain side, from which I could see every movement of the bear in the sparsely timbered valley below. She carried the cow in her forepaws for at least three miles, across jagged rocks ten feet high, over fallen logs, around the rocky mountainside where even a jackass could not get a foothold, to a narrow trail up the steep mountain. She never stopped to rest a moment, but went straight on. I followed her, and about half a mile from her lair laid her low. The cow weighed at least two hundred pounds and the bear about four hundred and fifty."

THE MAN "ON THE FENCE"

NEEDS BUT A HINT TO BRING HIM DOWN ON THE RIGHT SIDE.

He wants to buy a binder. Has been fooled once or twice and now really wants to know what machine can be relied upon—what machine will actually "live up" to the claims made for it by its makers. Here are some hints: 50,000 more Deering machines were sold last season than in any previous year. 6700 employees are working day and night in the Deering factories. 85 acres of ground are covered by the Deering factories—twice as large as any other existence. Deering machines have the only perfect ball and roller bearings. Deering machines are the lightest draft grain and grass cutters ever built. These are straws. They tell which way the wind blows. They should be helpful hints to the man on the fence.

Henry Hobein Dead.
Henry Hobein, one of the pioneers of this section, passed away very suddenly at his late residence, about one mile west of here, yesterday morning. He has been under the care of his physician for a number of years past, but death came when least expected. Mr. Hobein was born in Germany April 11, 1829, and came to this country while a young man. He was a faithful member of Zion's Evangelical church and was always prominent in church work. The funeral will be held from his late residence at 1:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon and at Zion's church at 2:30 o'clock. Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

pend upon the character of the people. The character of the people is developed and elevated through and by the use of good literature. Therefore the greatest object of good literature is to promote the welfare and prosperity of any people. First there is the literature of power. The function of the first is to teach; that of the second is to move. The first is a rudder, the second an oar or a sail. Looking at it in this way we are able to see how great the importance of literature is. We learn something new every day. Not an hour passes when we read, in which we do not learn something new, either for good or bad. Everything received from reading tends to educate the temper and influence our future lives. The love of knowledge comes with good reading grows upon it.

THE GROWTH OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.
(Herman C. Wildhagen.)

A merciful Providence and the wisdom and foresight of a majority of the people in the United States placed Abraham Lincoln in the presidential chair. He said that the union must be preserved at any cost. The war began and lasted four long years, during which Abraham Lincoln issued the proclamation of emancipation to the slaves; a great and noble deed. It made the Republican party greater than ever before in the eyes of the people. The war was brought to a close under the successful ruses of the Republican party. But now comes the reconstruction. The Republican party succeeded in reconstructing the states and in bringing about prosperity—never before known. Other questions have arisen since the civil war and have become great questions. In all, the Republican party has shown great wisdom and has always acted for the best interests of the people. We are again under a Republican administration—an era of prosperity in spite of the late war.

UNITED STATES FORESTS.
(Raymond E. Beutler.)

There is a serene and settled majesty in woodland scenery that enters the soul and delights and elevates it, filling it with noble inclination. Nature has been the great teacher of all our renowned poets. The forest has been his class room, where he has been charmed by singing of birds and the fragrance of the zephyr's flowers that fill the air with their fragrance. If these small flowers of the forest inspired the poets to write their beautiful lays, what an inspiration must fill his heart when he roams among the forests of the magnificent Sequoias. The destruction of the forests has had the greatest influence on mankind. Centuries ago, as the American Indian, living by means of hunting and fishing, made his home here in the wilderness, surrounded on all sides by endless forests, he was at peace with his neighbor and was content with his home. But, alas! when nature yielded to the blow of the ax, his hunting grounds were destroyed, his river dried up and instead of remaining friendly with his neighbors he became dissatisfied and warlike.

RURAL HAPPINESS.
(George B. Zimmer.)

To awake in the morning and see the sun shining brightly and clearly through the windows, while the birds out doors are singing their morning prayers in a melodious chorus, is the delight of the rustic. It makes him wish all his life could be spent in listening to such music. To awake in the fall and see the ground covered with silvery frost; to walk out while the dewdrops sparkle like diamonds in the cup of every flower; to awake in the winter and see the ground covered with a mantle of snow, are pleasures and scenes which are strangers to city life. To breathe in the fresh, pure air of the dawning day; to gaze out over the beautiful attractive sceneries of bloom; and over a broad sweep of free, beautiful country, bounded by the sky, in which all the most wonderful shades of color are blended in a marvel of beauty, which no human painter can ever hope to imitate or ever approach; to look at, to admire the beauty and acknowledge the power of a sunrise in the country is rural happiness.

A SOFT ANSWER TURNETH AWAY WRATH.
(Alma Strickfaden.)

How little we can see of the depths beneath the smooth surface. How little of the struggle between a quick temper and the determination to control that spirit and give a quiet answer. Is this not greater strength of character than that shown in an empty, idle taunt, or in a scathing remark? Does not this show the man? Is not that true pride and self-respect which will not allow oneself to break from restraint? Does not the man who gives a soft answer always gain, while the man with the hasty, blundering tongue loses? Merely as a question of diplomacy the soft answer is the best ally for here the truth that it "turneth away wrath" is most important and most evident. In active life we need it everywhere. If we attempt things in a hasty zeal we rarely gain our purpose. A half-hearted response may provoke quick words and oh, the result! If we have been depending upon the issue of this affair we are woefully disappointed in finding that our quick answer has made us an enemy and mined our plans.

Would Not Suffer So Again for Fifty Times Its Cost.
I awoke last night with severe pains in my stomach. I never felt so badly in all my life. When I came down to work this morning I felt so weak I could hardly work. I went to Miller & McCurdy's drug store and they recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It worked like magic and one dose fixed me all right. It certainly is the finest thing I ever used for stomach trouble. I shall not be without it in my house hereafter, for I should not care to endure the sufferings of last night again for fifty times its price.—G. H. WILSON, Liveryman, Burgetstown, Washington Co., Pa. This remedy is for sale by A. L. Waller, Barrington, and A. S. Olms, Palatine.

An Editor Finds a Sure Cure for Rheumatism.
A. R. De Fluenc, editor of the Journal, Doylestown, Ohio, suffered for a number of years with rheumatism in his right shoulder and side. He says: "My right arm at times was entirely useless. I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and was surprised to receive relief almost immediately. The Pain Balm has been a constant companion of mine ever since and it never fails." For sale by A. L. Waller, Barrington, and A. S. Olms, Palatine.
