Forest and Stream, a publication devoted to sportsmanship, makes an earnest appeal for the passage and enforcement of a law that will save the heath hen of Marthas Vineyard from the immediate extermination with which it is now threatened. This bird, than which few, according to its well informed advocate, are more truly and highly estimable, is the eastern representative of the family to which the plinned grouse of the west belongs and once had a range covering Long Island, New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky and some other states, but the shortsighted greed of the market hunters long ago destroyed it in all these places, and today only in Marthas Vineyard can a single small, sad tribe of heath hens be found leading a precarious existence, with an enormous price on the head of every one of its members. "It is believed by those cognizant of conditions," says Forest and Stream, "that the number of birds remaining may be estimated at not more than half a hundred," and the poor creatures are now in deadly peril, not as formerly, because they are very good to eat, but because the ornithological collector who doesn't get a heath hen for his collection at once will not get one at all. As a result scientific persons who ought to be more than a little ashamed of themselves are offering the natives of the island from $25 to $30 a piece for specimens of the doomed race. The appeal of Forest and Stream ought to be heeded.
 Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese minister to this country, regards the narrative of Adam and Eve and the forbidden fruit as a bit of humorous fiction. According to all accounts, Adam could never see anything funny about it.
 An Italian scientist announces that dreams are hereditary. The inference is that the ancestors of the people who have nightmare were hoss jockeys.
 Montana rejoices in the possession of three United States senators, though but one of them can vote. The other two are gentlemen in waiting.
 White Buffalo, the Chicago Irishman who was recently elected chief of the Winnebago Indians, has received a challenge from Tom Thunder, an Indian who thinks he ought to have White Buffalo's job, to fight a duel to the death with tomahawks. Unfortunately, Tom insists that the duel shall be fought in the Winnebago country, far from the madding crowd; hence there will be no gate receipts to be devoted to charity.
 The rather petulant speech of Lord Salisbury before the London Conservative association belaboring the Boers for having caused the English some inconvenience and expense in their subjugation reminds one of the man who swore at the eels because they would not lay still while he skinned them.
 It is proposed to establish movable automobile hospitals or repair shops. This is a good idea and does away with the necessity of taking a horse along to haul the automobile home when going out for a pleasure ride.

The Convention's Nominees.

Biographical Notes About McKinley and Roosevelt.

William McKinley.

Theodore Roosevelt.

The Republican national convention of 1900 was the shortest on record, when hours of time that it was in session are taken into consideration. It was called to order at 12:31 Tuesday, and at 2:30 p. m. took a recess to Wednesday at noon. At 3 p. m. Wednesday a recess was taken to 10:30 Thursday. At 2:30 on Thursday its work was done and the convention was adjourned sine die. No national convention ever consumed less time in hours.

Of course the work of the convention "laid before it" so to put it. There was not the slightest doubt on any point except the vice presidency, and as soon as the delegates began to arrive that doubt was dispelled. Roosevelt was the choice of nearly every delegation for second place.

McKinley's Biography.

James McKinley, the president's ancestor, landed in this country about 1743, and settled later in Chanceford Township, York county, Pa., where David McKinley, great-grandfather of the president, was born in May, 1755. The records of the Pension Bureau show that David McKinley was a soldier in the revolution and participated in the capture of Paulus Hook and the engagements of Amboy and Chester Hill. He died in 1840, in Ohio, at the age of eighty-five. A son, James McKinley, moved to Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1809. At that time William, his son, born in Pine Township, Mercer county, Pa., was two years old. James McKinley was an iron manufacturer or furnace man, and his son William followed the same vocation. When William was twenty-two years old he married Nancy Allison of Canton, O., the couple having nine children, of whom William Jr., the president, was the seventh. William McKinley, Sr., died in November, 1892, having lived to witness the rise of his son from a school teacher through posts of national prominence to be governor of Ohio.

The president was born at Niles, Trumbull county, O., on January 29, 1843. He attended the public schools in that town until he was nine years old, at which time his father moved to Poland, Mahoning county, O., where the future president entered Union Seminary, pursuing his studies in that institution until he was seventeen years old. He is said to have excelled in mathematics and languages, and to have bested all his fellow-students in debating the public questions of the day.

In 1860 he was sent to Allegheny college, Meadville, Pa., but gave up his course after a few months on account of poor health. After a period of rest he became a teacher in the public schools of the Kerr district, near Poland, having joined the Methodist Episcopal church in Poland. In the spring of 1861 he was a clerk in the postoffice at Poland, which position he gave up to enlist at Columbus, on June 11 of that year, in Company E of the Twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

William McKinley twice refused the nomination for president previous to the time when on the first ballot at the Republican National convention held in St. Louis in 1896 he was finally nominated and accepted. His first refusal was at the convention of 1888, when he supported Mr. Sherman, to whom he was pledged, forbidding the use of his name at a time when his formal assent or negative acquiescence was all that was necessary to secure his own nomination. At the ensuing convention of 1892 he received 182 votes for the nomination, his name not having been presented, as it was well known he was an ardent supporter of Harrison and would immediately withdraw his name should it have been proposed. Being the permanent chairman of the convention, he was greatly embarrassed by the efforts of his supporters to make him the presidential candidate, and, leaving the chair on the announcement of the result of the first ballot, made a motion to make the nomination of Mr. Harrison unanimous. His motion was carried.

On April 16, 1890, McKinley introduced into the House the general tariff measure which has since been known as the "McKinley bill." For four months the measure had been under consideration, and every interest in the country, including manufacturers, laborers, merchants, farmers, importers, agents, free traders, and protectionists, had been freely heard, the minority having been given as good an opportunity to present their views as had the majority. His speech on May 7 in support of the measure sustained his reputation as an orator and dispassionate advocate, and seldom has such hearty applause been accorded any leader as greeted him upon the conclusion of his address.

McKinley's home life has been that of the representative American, and almost ideal. He married on January 25, Miss Ida Saxton, granddaughter of John Saxton, for sixty years editor of the Ohio Repository, still published at Canton. Two girls, Christine Ida and Kate, were born to Mr. and Mrs. McKinley, both of them dying at early ages.

Gov. Roosevelt's Career.

Gov. Roosevelt was born in New York city, Oct. 27, 1858, of Dutch and Scotch-Irish ancestry. His father was Theodore Roosevelt, after whom the governor was named, and his mother, whose given name was Martha, was the daughter of James and Martha Bulloch of Georgia. Young Roosevelt was primarily educated at home under private teachers, after which he entered Harvard, graduating in 1880. Those qualities of aggressiveness which have marked his more recent years of public life were present with him in college and he was a conspicuous figure among his fellows.

It was an interesting period in the history of the party and the nation, and young Roosevelt entered upon the political field with eagerness and energy. The purification of political and official life had been for some time an ideal with him, and with this came the belief in the efficacy of the application of civil service rules to executive conduct. In 1882 he was nominated for the State Assembly and was elected. He served for three years. In 1886 Mr. Roosevelt was nominated as an independent candidate for mayor of New York, but, although indorsed by the Republicans, was defeated.

In 1884 he was chairman of the New York delegation to the national Republican convention. He had been among those who did not regard Mr. Blaine as the most available candidate of the party, but after the latter's nomination Mr. Roosevelt gave him his hearty support, and in the face of the remarkable defection in New York at that time. In May, 1889, President Harrison appointed him civil service commissioner, and he served as president of the board until May, 1896.

As president of the civil service commission Roosevelt resigned in May, 1895, to become president of the New York board of police commissioners.

On May 6, 1898, Roosevelt resigned his place in the cabinet, assistant secretary of the navy, to muster in a cavalry regiment for the Spanish war. Life in the west had made this a fitting ambition. As a hunter of big game, used to the saddle and the camp, and an unerring shot with rifle and re-most thrilling pieces of military history produced in recent years."

Governor Roosevelt has been twice married. His first wife was Alice Lee of Boston, who left a daughter. In 1886 he married Miss Edith Carow of New York. There are six children, two of whom are sons. His domestic life is ideal. Whether ensconced in winter quarters at Albany or New York, or at the famous Roosevelt summer home at Oyster Bay on Long Island, the leader of the Rough Riders is an indulgent father and romps with his children with as much zest as the youngest of them. The youngsters are known as the Roosevelt half dozen, and all reflect in some manner the paternal characteristics. The oldest girl is Alice, tall, dark and serious looking. She rides her father's Cuban campaign horse with fearlessness and grace. The next olive branch is Theodore, Jr., or "young Teddy," the idol of his father's heart and a genuine chip of the old block. volver, the country recognized in him the making of a dashing cavalry leader. He had experienced military duty in the New York National Guard in the '80s. Col. Wood was put in command of the Rough Riders; Roosevelt was lieutenant colonel. On June 15 the regiment sailed to join General Shafter in Cuba.

From the time of landing until the fall of Santiago the Rough Riders were giant figures in the campaign. Their work reached a climax on July 1, when Lieutenant Colonel Roosevelt led the regiment in the desperate charge up San Juan hill. He had shared all the hardships of his men, and when he broke the red tape of discipline to complain of General Shafter's camp and its dangers from disease the army was with him and the war department listened to his judgment. On July 11 he was commissioned colonel of volunteers.

Scarcely two months later the new military hero was nominated for governor of New York. In the convention he received 753 votes, against the 218 cast for Governor Frank S. Black.

As a writer of outing papers his varied experiences on the trail have served him well. In biography, his life of Thomas H. Benton and of Gouverneur Morris have been praised. Essays and papers dealing with political life have added to his reputation. Of his latest work, "The Rough Riders" has been pointed to as "one of the day shooting bigger game than his father ever saw. He also rides a pony of his own. Alice, the oldest girl, is nearly 16. She is the only child of the first Mrs. Roosevelt. "Young Teddy," the present Mrs. Roosevelt's oldest child, is 13. Then there are Ker-

How to Carry Invalid.

Carrying an invalid can easily be managed by two people of average strength. They should join their hands crosswise, so as to form a firm seat. If the invalid is lifted on this, and puts his arms around the necks of two persons, he may be carried with perfect safety up and downstairs.

Barber Harris sustained a serious fall from his wheel last Monday when returning from his noonday meal, and although not laid up, is nursing a rather sore leg. His daily trips homeward and back take him by a house where a dog resides who enjoys nothing better than a good race with Mr. Harris, and was in the habit of giving him a little spurt daily, but this day he made a miscalculation and instead of keeping his side of the track attempted to cross over to the other side and in so doing was struck amidstships and Mr. Harris found himself smoothing down the rough spots on the roadbed. He says he prefers walking now-a-days.

Prof. J. I. Sears' concert Saturday evening at the M. E. church, was one of the finest ever given in our village, although it was very poorly attended, which clearly shows how few of our people are really interested in a first-class entertainment when it costs 25 cents. We noticed the walk in front of the church was filled to overflowing and all seemed to enjoy the program hugely but couldn't afford to buy a ticket. This is but the second musicale Prof. Sears has given in our village and we fear it will be the last as our people do not seem to appreciate a good entertainment. A little 10c soap show catches them better.
