most instrumental in securing the enactment of the new child labor law of Illinois it is considered the best child labor law of any state in the Union, which will put Illinois far in the lead of other state in the matter of protecting children from corporate and paternal greed. If there are any defects in the law they have not been discovered by the women who labored so assiduously for its adoption and who believe that they have thus redeemed thousands of children from premature and debilitating labor. Considering the pressure brought to bear against the law by the glassmakers and other influential interests and the efforts to load it with vitiating amendments, its passage was an act of commendable courage on the part of the Illinois legislature.

He dwelt upon the evils of the great monopolies to the people and country in general, and he handled his subject most ably and rendered it well.

A vocal solo, "Violets," by Mrs. W. W. Walsh, was followed by a duet, "Turning the Tables," by Misses Winnie Pratt and Leila Glynch. Theme: "How to make the most of life," by Miss Agnes Beatrice Geary, was fine; her subject was well chosen, beginning with a person's early life and following it upward, showing how people may and should use their lives urday and Sunday with relatives and to the best of advantage. # REPUDIATE BOSSISM.

Voters of Cook County Sit Down Hard on William Lorimer.

The judicial election held in the city of Chicago and Cook county last Monday proved a, severe blow to the Republican ticket, at least to the portion known as the "Lorimer branch."

It was predicted by the press of Chicago, excepting the Inter Ocean, which is known to be William Lorimer's personal organ, that a judicial ticket composed of jurists who had been active in ward politics of that

The Republicans of Chicago, someare sorry to see him leave for other time ago determined that any man or territory, but we wish to recommend set of men whose candidacy was eshim to his new patrons as a first-class poused by William Lorimer and his workman and one who will give lieutenants, must be defeated, not because such candidates were not men qualified to fill the high position to which they aspired, but because they wore the badge of bossism in politics.

> One need only to look at the vote cast in the solid Republican wards of Chicago last Monday to note the dissatisfaction expressed by the voters. Wherever the better element of the party found an opportunity to hit Lorimerism the hit was made. Even after taking into camp a contingent of disgruntled Democrats-ward workers and colonizers-the bosses were unable to make a showing for their ticket.

There is one thing certain. The Republican party of Chicago and Cook county must cut loose from the barnacles which impede its progress. Every candidate that William Lorimer has nominated for mayor of Chicago has been defeated. Every candiin secret caucus and erect a ticket. The independent voters of Chicago and Cook county are to be congratulated on their decisive victory. The judicial election was not a Democratic victory, but a rebuke by Republicans to bossism.

fear of some change. No one seems to know what a day will bring forth. Did you see Stephen?" "Yes."

"It can't be, I suppose?"

"You know it can't be, mother." She was hurt at the question. It was a wrong to Cluny, and she said with some temper, "it could not be under any circumstances. The man is mean, he has just threatened me. If I had not been a woman I would have given him his threat back in his teeth. I would rather be Cluny's wife, if Cluny had not a crown."

The next day Cymlin went to Jevery House and reported on his return, its forlorn emptiness. There were only two or three servants there, and they had no idea when the family would return.

About a week after Matilda's departure Cluny called early one evening and asked Jane to go with him to Mr. Milton's house in Petty France. They sauntered through St. James' park, and soon lost sight of all humanity, and were conscious only of each other's presence. So much so, that they never noticed a figure which emerged from behind a clump of shrubs, and stood looking at them. It was the Lord General. His face was grave, but not unhappy, and when he saw Cluny and Jane he stood still a moment, and then quietly withdrew into the shadow he had left. A smile was round his mouth, and his lips moved in words of bless-

It was impossible not to feel that something of great moment had happened, or was going to happen; and when Jane entered the hall at Sandys and saw Doctor Verity's hat and cloak there, she expected that he had come with information. The next moment Mrs. Swaffham came hurriedly forward.

"Mother." cried Jane. "what is the matter? What has happened?" And Mrs. Swaffham answered:

"The strangest thing that ever happened in England."

Even while she spoke they heard Gen. Swaffham coming up the steps, tol. He told them that the Lord had the clatter of his arms emphasizing his perturbed feelings. He had scarcely entered the door ere Doctor Verity came into the hall crying:

"Is it true, Israel? Is it true?" "Quite true."

"And well done?"

"Well done. I am sure of it."

Men and women went into the parlor together, and a servant began to remove the General's cavalry boots kind must come to-day. When I reached Whitehall I found the Lord General waiting for Sir Harry Vane and the members who had promised to come and continue the conference relating to the bill early in the day. The General was occupying himself with a book, but as the hours went by he grew restless and laid it down. Then he turned to me and said, ing as he took another path to the 'Truly these men are long in coming; gate he wished, and there was a are you ready, General?' and before feeling of pleasure yet in his heart I could answer he asked again 'ready when he entered the sombre apart- and willing?' Cromwell opened the discussion by reminding the members that he had already held more than a dozen meetings, in order to induce Parliament to issue an Act for the election of a new Parliament, and then discharge itself. "This is what the people want in every corner of the nation," he said, "and they are laying at our doors the non-performance of this duty and of their wishes."

Hazelrig reminded him that Parliaafter calling for a new election.

"It is now only the 19th of April," answered Cromwell, sharply. "Give me leave to tell you that the 3d of November will not do. Such a far-off promise is but words for children. I

The Parliamentary members agreed to let the bill for perpetuating themselves live over until after another General Harrison and told him he conference to be held the following judged 'it was high time to dissolve day, and with this understanding, the members of the Council separated.

Cromwell Interferes. Daylight came with that soft radiance of sunshine over fresh green things which makes spring so delightful. Early in the morning Jane's friends called for her, and they went away together full of youth's enthusiasm and anticipation. They took the road to the river, and to the sound of music and the falling and could be restrained no longer. "'My lord!' he cried, 'Parliament is sitting at this moment, and Sir Harry Vane, Sidney and Henry Marten are urging the immediate passage of the bill so hateful to the whole nation.'

"Then Cromwell roused himself like an angry lion. His passion at this perfidious conduct leaped into flame, he shouted to Lambert and his ment had determined to dissolve on own troop of Ironsides. He gave me the 3d of the ensuing November, the signal I understood, and we went quickly to the Parliament house.

"But what then?" asked Doctor Verity, his face burning with the eager soul behind it. "I stood at the door watching him, my men being in the lobby. He went to his usual seat, but in a very great and majestic manner, and for a little while he listened to the debate. Then he beckoned Major this Parliament.' And Harrison told me this afternoon, that he advised Cromwell to consider what he would do, for it was a work great and dangerous, and who, he asked, 'is sufficient for it?' And Cromwell answered, 'The Servant of the Lord, he is sufficient,' yet he sat down again, looking at me as he did so, and I looked back straight into his eyes that I and mine could be depended on.

"In a few minutes the question for passing the bill was put, and the man around the House, and it quailed ly the other replied: under some great caks in the seclud- ed on his seat and was uneasy. He full month, having fallen a victim to d park.

"Did no one open their mouth against him?"

"No one but Sir Peter Wentworth. He said, 'My Lord General, this Parliament has done great things for England,' and Cromwell answered, 'The spoke in the wheel that creaks most does not bear the burden in the cart!' Then Sir Peter told Cromwell his abuse of the Parliament was the more horrid because it came from the servant of the Parliament, the man

At these words Dr. Verity laughed loudly-"Cromwell, the servant of such a Parliament!" he cried. "Not he; what then, Israel?"

"He told Wentworth to be quiet. the floor of the House. I watched him as he did so. He breathed inward, like one who has a business of life and death in hand. I could see on his face that he was going to do the deed that had been the secret of his breast for many days; and his walk was that quick stride with which he ever went to meet an enemy. He stood in the middle of the House, and began to accuse the members personally. His words were swords. He flung them at the men as if they were javelins; shot them in their faces as if from a pisdone with them. He said they were no Parliament, and that he had been sent to put an end to their sitting and their prating.

"And at these words Cluny Neville spoke to the Sergeant, and he opened the doors, and some musketeers entered the House. Then Sir Harry Vane cried out, 'This is not honest, and Cromwell reminded him of his own broken promise, and they and spurs. "I told you, Doctor, this began to go out, at first slowly, and morning, that a settlement of some then in a hurry, treading on the heels of each other."

"What of Lenthall? He has a stubborn will." "He sat still in the Speaker's chair, until Cromwell ordered him to come down. For a moment he hesitated, but Gen. Harrison said, I will lend you my hand, sir; and so he also went out."

"But was there no attempt to stay such dismissals? I am amazed, dumbfounded!" said Doctor Verity.

"Alderman Allen, the Treasurer of the Army, as he went out said some-thing to Cromwell which an end him very much; and he then at there charged Allen with a shorta of one hundred thousand pounds, and committed him to the care of a musketeer for examination. I tell you, there no gainsaying the Crot this hour. He was more than morknew, if they had not known before, his mother at 98, his grandfather at why he was never defeated in battle."

"After the Speaker had less, what then?"

"His eye fell upon the Mace, and he said scornfully to some of the Ironsides, 'Take that bauble away!' Then he ordered the musketeers to clear the House, he himself walking up to its Clerk and taking from under his arm the bill which had caused the trouble, and which was ready to pass. He ordered the man to go home, and he slipped away without a question. Cromwell was the last soul to leave the Chamber, and as he went out of it he locked the door and put the key in his pockets He then walked quietly back to his rooms in the Cockpit."

"He will need God on his right hand and on his left," said Doctor Verity. "More than we can tell will come of this-implacable hostility, rancorous jealousy, everlasting envy and spite. The members-

The Cost of Census-Taking.

The difference between the cost of securing the returns from the six simple questions asked in 1790, and that of the extended inquiry made a century later, is illustrated by the per capita cost, which in 1790 was 1.13 cents, and in 1900, 15.5 cents. In 1790 Virginia was the most populous state in the Union, having 747,610 inhabitants. The records of the Treasury department show that at the first census, the cost of making the enumeration in that state was $7,553.90. Moreover, at that enumeration, the underpaid assistant marshals supplied their own blanks, an item which was of considerable importance in the days when all paper was made laboriously by hand. In 1900 the population of Maine-about 700,000-most nearly-approximated that of Virginia in 1790.

At the twelfth census the cost of actual enumeration in Maine, including the pay of supervisors, was $34,-560.90, or more than three-fourths of the amount expended for the enumeration of the entire United States in 1790, though the pay of an enumerator in 1900 did not exceed the wages of an intelligent day from the cheeks of the fish. laborer.-The Century.

FRIDAY, JUNE, 5 1908.

As to Marrying Wives' Relatives. Naturally there is more or less of comment in England, where a well sustained opposition to the marriage of a man to his deceased wife's sister prevails, over the recent marriage, presumably under the sanction of the British authorities, in the Church of St. Clement Danes, London, of Miss Gladys Crocker, daughter of the late California millionaire of San Francisco, to Powers Gourand, who is her mother's brother-in-law, or, to be more explicit, the brother of her mother's second husband. In the United States there is no particular objection to the marriage of a woman to the husband of her deceased sister or to the marriage of a man to his deceased wife's sister, but in Great Britain it is different, and it is quite surprising that such an alliance as the Gourand-Crocker union was permitted. The confusion likely to arise over the marriage of a man to his deceased wife's sister would be trivial compared to the complications that might arise in this case. The former Widow Crocker will naturally make an effort constantly to refer to Mrs. Powers Gourand as her daughter, but circumstances must inevitably and frequently arise which will make it necessary for her to speak of Mrs. Powers Gourand as her sister-in-law or as "my husband's sister-in-law."

In like manner Mrs. Powers Gourand, though making an effort to think and speak of the former Widow Crocker as her mother, will be forced at times to speak of her as "my husband's brother's wife," or "my sisterin-law," or "my sister by marriage."

Should the younger Mrs. Gourand be blessed with children, their grandmother will also be their aunt, and their cousins, children of the former Widow Crocker by her second husband, will be their mother's stepsisters and stepbrothers. All this does not take into account the situation of Mr. Powers Gourand, whose brother has become his stepfather-in-law and whose wife's mother is his sister-in-law.

The Alaskan Boundary Dispute.

There seems to be a fair prospect that the Alaska-Yukon boundary dispute will be speedily and permanently settled, and that, too, in accordance with the contention of the United States. In England and even in Canada the belief is growing that the Dominion government has a poor case to present to the joint commission. Indeed, in some influential quarters in London it is predicted unhesitatingly that the commission will find in favor of the United States. The case of the Dominion is conceded by lawyers and public men who have made a study of it to be fatally weak. A leading London paper's correspondent at Ottawa expresses this view and declares the whole Canadian claim bears every earmark of being an afterthought or ulterior devise. He points out, in cursorily reviewing his countrymen's contention, that it was not until 1887, after gold was known to exist in paying quantities in Alaska, that Canada discovered an error in the boundary line in her favor. "Indeed," this correspondent continues, "we scarcely regarded our case as worth the candle until after the discovery of gold in the Yukon, seven or eight years ago, when, of course, we desired to control the routes running north from the Lynn canal to the Yukon river and Daw-

This and other similar expressions would seem to foreshadow an early settlement of the boundary contention in a manner satisfactory to the United States and at least just to Canadians.

Suit has been brought in the United States circuit court at St. Joseph, Mo., by a number of life insurance companies for the annulment of policies of a man who is asserted to have been suffering from consumption and other ailments at the time they were isued and for five years previous thereto. It might be inferred that these insurance companies did not employ medical examiners or that the examiners were woefully incompetent.

"It is due our first parents," remarks the Kansas City Journal, "to explain that the apple for which they sacrificed their high estate was not a Ben Davis." This would seem to indicate that the garden of Eden was not located in Missouri.

When a rich man buys a racing stable there is usually much talk about what he is doing for the turf. Not so much is said, however, about what the turf is doing to the public.

Apparently those physicians and surgeons who so bitterly denounce Professor Lorenz need treatment for congenital dislocation of the nose.

The steam pianola has acquired a foreign accent, but otherwise the circus parade features are not materially changed since last season.

It is estimated that 28,000 automobiles will be manufactured in the United States this year. The American output of motor vehicles in 1902 had a value of $25,000,000. In the same year Great Britain imported motors and parts of motors to the value of $5,512,-310, and France exported motor cars to the value of $5,310,200. Seventy French manufacturers of automobiles turned out last year 12,000 motor cars, or less than half the number turned out by American manufacturers. Commenting on these figures, Henry Norman in the World's Work for April expresses the opinion that business automobiles will soon be universal, that commercial travelers will take their samples through the country in suitable motor cars and that farmers will send their produce to market by the co-operative use of automobiles. Mr. Norman believes also that the motor will kill the railway and repeats the threadbare prophecy that it will banish horses from the country as well as from the city!

There is no doubt that the automobile has come to stay and that the sphere of its utility will be increased year by year, though the fulfillment of Mr. Norman's extravagant prophecy is a long way in the future, if it is ever realized. The railway, instead of abolishing the Horse, called for more horses. The bicycle, that was to run the horse away from the byways and highways, has been almost banished from the highways, while the horse in greater numbers is on the highways, in the fields and on the streets. The horse will always be with us, but the coming automobile may accomplish wonders for the convenience of men.

The growth in popularity and usefulness of the automobile, however, will depend largely upon the spirit in which automobilists accept the wholesome regulations for the proper protection of the public against accident from fast and reckless running of their machines on the public highways. At the present time, as in the past, the worst enemy of the horseless carriage is its arrogant and reckless driver, though there is an inclination on the part of many automobilists to pay somewhat more respect to the rights of others than formerly.

The Attacks on Professor Lorenz.

To the lay mind there is something quite unaccountable in the severe criticism visited upon Professor Lorenz, the eminent Vienna surgeon, at the recent meeting of the American Medical association at New Orleans for the introduction in this country of his bloodless method of treating congenital hip dislocations. It would seem that, in view of Professor Lorenz's successful demonstrations of his methods some months ago, the doctors would welcome the new light shed upon their profession. Not so, apparently, from the outgivings of the New Orleans as-

Physicians are naturally conservative, and whatever progress is made in the profession is invariably made in the face of great obstacles. It is only right that they should subject new discoveries or methods to the closest scrutiny before accepting them at their face value, for life is too sacred to be experimented upon. And yet it would seem as though the Lorenz method had by this time been put to sufficient test to prove that there is merit in it, enough at least to lead members of the medical profession to question it only in a receptive spirit. As for the laity, it is more likely to prefer the bloodless manipulations of Lorenz to the surgeon's knife.

Savages Note Things to Which Civilized Eyes Are Blind.

Savages are supposed to have keener senses, especially a keener sense of sight, than civilized races. The author of "Idle Days In Patagonia" does not accept this theory. He believes that savages have no keener senses, but that they pay closer attention to what comes within the range of their perception. As an instance of quick response to an impression he tells the following

On March 12, 1861, a company of hunters were camping beside a gr of willows in Patagonia. About 8 o'clock that evening, while they were seated round the fire roasting their es trich meat, Sosa suddenly sprang to his feet and held his open hand high above his head for some moments.

On that evening occurred the earthquake which destroyed the distant city of Mendoza and crushed 12,000 people to death beneath the ruins. ness cannot be put on for a day if old age has had a grip on you for months. It is important to preserve the fire of youth as long as possible, to carry freshness and vigor into old age by keeping up a hearty interest in everything that interests youth. Many of us seem to think that youthful sports and pastimes are foolish, and before we know it we get entirely out of sympathy with all young life, and consequently really old, whatever our years. We must think youthful thoughts, associate with young people and interest them. When a person ceases to interest the young he may be sure that he is showing signs of old age.-Success.

THE FLAG IN BATTLE

Its Development From the First Inanimate Object Carried Aloft on a Office 420 Ashland Blk., Chicago Staff-Dear to the Hearts of Fighters In All Ages and Nations.

Where in the whole world is another thing meaningless in itself that has signified so much or served so greatly in the dramas of national life as the flag? asks the London Globe.

One tradition says the Saracens first carried an orthodox standard into battle and thus gave the idea, as they gave so many others, to the crusaders. But Office: Grand Opera House Bldg., obviously the flag is far older than this, and it is interesting to note its development from the first inanimate object borne aloft on a staff so as to be gener- Telephone Central 3308. ally visible down to the complicated blazonry of a royal banner in our own ages. The Egyptians thus carried before their hosts the figure of a sacred animal on a spear, and the Assyrians, as their carvings tell us, inspired the hopes and centered the attentions of their soldiers in the same way. The royal standard of the Persians for many centuries was a blacksmith's Telephone Gentral 2056. apron, and it is said a local prince in passing a hermit's cell on the way to battle one morning asked the inmate for his blessing or something expressive to put on that artless cognizance. G. W. Spunger, The hermit, possibly a little touchy, as even saints will be when disturbed at breakfast time, threw the chieftain the flat, round cake he was eating, which was duly added to the apron; hence the Persian "sun." The lion was an obvious afterthought. The Turks used a horse's tail, the rank of a pasha being known by the number of tails he carried, and probably this suggested the much bifurcated pennon of early western chivalry familiar to every one who has studied the Bayeux tapestry or early illuminated missals.

In the middle ages, devoted to display and military arrogance, the flag stood in relationship to the great capfain's array as his personal armor Office in Grunau Bldg. stood to himself; it insured recognition BARRINGTON, in the melee and supplied a rallying point for the fighters such as nothing else could have done. This led to an etiquette of flags which apportioned shape and size to every rank of the peerage, from the royal standard itself down through a varied array of banners, gonfalons, pennons, ensigns and other "bits of red rag," and kept the heralds' college busy, besides supplying the poets with admirable local col-

When the Douglas unfurled his standard at Otterburn-a flag, by the way, which is still in existence-he declared, and thought not without reason, that the mere sight of that famous cloth would put the English host to rout. And even in comparatively modern and prosaic times the belief that a dreaded captain was beneath a certain emblem has sufficed to turn the scales of battle.

Thus in the French war of 1797 the French Rear Admiral Sarcy when cruising with six frigates in the bay of Bali came in sight of five or our Indiamen, insurance companies of the world. one of them the Woodford, Captain Lennox. They were homeward bound and all richly laden, and to all appearances they had no chance of escape, when Captain Lennox rescued them by an act of great judgment and presence of mind. He first of all hoisted in his own ship a flag which the French admiral knew well, that of the British Admiral Rainier, blue, at the mizzen, and he eight thousand, three hundred and made all the other ships in his company hoist pennants and ensigns to correspond. But he did more. He detached vanced toward the French reconnoitering frigate, the Cybele, the latter, completely deceived, made all sail to join her consorts, on which the French admiral, believing he was in the presence Captain Lennox and his consorts completed their voyage in safety.

The flag indeed preserved its glamour long after the time when it was the cynosure of conflict, the emblazoned meteor of victory, as Milton calls it. Moscow, burned their standards and in the excess of their bitter affection mixed the ashes with wine and drank them so. The same was done at Metz and Sedan, and even today there is probably no soldier in the world who would not do a little more for his colors than for anything else within his marinto all ranks of society. In some isolated instances men showed the white feather. In nearly every case, however, by their actions they showed the material of which true American manhood is made.

E. L. Cowdry and his brother are among those who escaped from the flood. When asked for a story of his experience the former said: "Oh, it was terrible; I can't describe it. It seems as if I have lived in a horrible nightmare for the last two days.

sufferers. In all sections where the people suffered from the floods the prices of provisions leaped higher and higher as the call for food became more urgent. Eggs, that had been 12 cents a dozen, rose to 50 cents. Other edibles, especially fresh meats and vegetables, rose in proportion and were almost unobtainable at famine prices.

Sickness added its terrors to the suffering of the homeless refugees from the flood districts. In Topeka an epidemic of measles and scarlet fever is rife. Thieves were busy there and at Kansas City. Many of the bodies were mangled beyond recognition, the only means of identification being the records of the two cotton mills in which most of the victims worked.

Lasts Two Minutes.

The death-dealing storm appeared suddenly a little before 1 o'clock, and within two minutes it had killed nearly a hundred persons, torn two stories from the five-story brick factory of the Gainesville cotton mills, demolished almost 200 cottages, razed two brick stores to the ground and blown down innumerable outbuildings. By what appears to be a miracle the tornado's fury was confined to the outskirts of the city, the main business and residence portion not being touched. Torrents of rain accompanied the wind, but within five minutes after its first onslaught the sun was shining upon a scene of fearful

The list of the dead is confined mainly to operatives of the Gainesville cotton mills and the Pacolet cotton mills, and two-thirds of them were women and children.

Dead at Gainesville.

The list of the dead so far as obtainable at the Gainesville cotton mills and in and around the vicinity of the Southern depot numbers twenty-two. Twenty-eight persons are fatally injured.

Twenty-five were killed at New Holland and ten fatally injured.

Besides these, eight men, six white and two colored, were killed in the demolition of Joseph Logan's store near the Southern depot, and one man and one woman met death in the store of George Jones, the woman being the wife of the proprietor.,

Unconfirmed reports from White Sulphur, seven miles from Gainesville, say that about twelve persons were killed there.

Roars Like Artillery.

The tornado did its appalling work in such an incredibly short time that it is difficult to obtain a coherent description of its character. It appears is entirely surrounded with water. The to have swept down from the southwest, striking the Gainesville mills with a roar like the report of artillery. The property loss, it is now esti-, mated, will reach about $300,000. The most serious are the Gainesville cotton mills, $50,000, and the Pacolet mills, $100,000. The other losses of individuals and firms range from $1,-000 and less upward.

Judge D. L. Jones has announced the men that he had named to act on the board of review for Lake county for this year.

Both Mr. Wenban and Mr. Besley are well known in the county and their business experience has been such that they are well qualified to fill the responsible position.

Mr. Wenban has for years been engaged in the livery business in Lake Forest, and Mr. Besley is a member of the Besley Brewing company, of Waukegan.

For several years it has been the practice of the employes of the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad to unite in a picuic on July 4th, these events being encouraged and assisted by the railroad's management. Just now the event for the coming July 4th is under discussion, especially with reference to where it is to be held. Last
