

HE DIED ALONE

Joseph Dires, Better Known as "Old Joe," Is Found Dead in His Cabin To-Day.

"Old Joe" is no more. He was found dead in his cabin near Randall's Lake this Friday morning between 5 and 6 o'clock by his brother-in-law, Marecek.

Mr. Marecek was with him Thursday night about 10 o'clock, when he bade him goodnight, and returned to his own home a short distance away. When he left the old gentleman seemed to be in good health. At about 5 or 6 o'clock this morning he noticed a light burning in Joe's cabin and entered to bid him good morning. When he entered he found Joe sitting on a chair, one shoe off, and appeared to be pulling the other off. He spoke to him but received no answer. Stepping up to Joe, Marecek touched him on the shoulder and spoke to him again, but soon discovered that the old man was dead.

Dr. Richardson was sent for, and when he arrived found the body cold, giving conclusive evidence that Joe had been dead for several hours. Dr. Richardson sent for the coroner and Deputy Coroner Milan Reynolds responded.

The inquest was held this afternoon.

Geo. Wagner, H. H. Williams, E. M. Blocks, Wm. Gleske, Herman Schweitzer, with Dr. Richardson as foreman, found that the gentleman had come to his death from an attack of organic heart disease.

Joe, whose real name was Joseph Dires, a Bohemian, came to Barrington some ten years ago. His main occupation is said to have been that of telling fortunes. He was a recluse, refusing to live with anyone and although receiving his meals from his relatives already prepared, refused to eat at the table with anyone preferring to eat alone in his cabin.

The third ballot was a little stiffer, but T. J. Dockery won out by receiving 75 votes and M. Topping 45.

The evening preceding the village caucus the Y. M. C. A. under the head of Good Citizenship ticket placed in nomination for village trustees J. E. Heise, Geo. Lytle and J. E. Gleske, but later H. J. Lageschulte was substituted for J. E. Heise.

GIVES EXCELLENT LECTURE

Prof. Farr Makes Some Profitable and Timely Suggestions.

Last Friday morning, Assistant County Superintendent of Schools, C. W. Farr, gave a lecture in the high school assembly room, on cereals.

The pupils of the high school and seventh grade, and a number of farmers from this neighborhood attended, and listened to one of the best lectures given this community.

While the farmers and pupils received much information concerning cereals, each received something more in the lessons that Mr. Farr drew from this common product. It is impossible to report more than a few thoughts.

He spoke of their being breeds of cereals as there are of dogs and cattle. The seed corn should be selected in the ear, and should be typical of the breed. Ears should be chosen that are uniform in size, shape, color, etc.

The butt and tip should be well covered with grains, the rows straight and close together. The grains should be wedge shaped and very close together—in fact as little of the cob should be showing as possible.

After uniform, typical ears have been chosen they should be tested before planting. The testing could be done in March or the first of April. Each ear can be numbered by putting a box in the end.

Seventy-eight grains from different parts of the ear and place them on damp cotton or sand. If most of them sprout the ear should be saved for seed.

To make a success of the corn crop the farmer must use the whole process from seed time to harvest and he must arrange his work accordingly. There is a lesson for all in this. Man should try to see his whole life and plan each day accordingly.

Nature always does her best. Another lesson for man.

When God made nature He left no place at which man might not step in and better the plant or animal.

A man who raises only the best corn will be a better man than the one who raises just any kind of corn.

Mr. Farr summed up his whole lecture in the word of four letters—best. He says he gives these lectures to secure not alone better corn or other productions, but that we may learn from nature to grow better characters.

One of Lake County's Pioneer Settlers Passes Away

Died, Tuesday morning, at her home in Waukegan, Mrs. Daniel Oaks, at the advanced age of 90 years, 6 months, 12 days.

Miss Lavina Hayward was born in Conway, Mass., September 21, 1815, and on April 22, 1841, she was married to Daniel Oaks, who was born in Stamford, Vt., April 20, 1816. Their union was blessed with four children, three sons and a daughter, as follows:

Theron H. was resident of Waukegan; Lancelot E. is married and resides in Chicago; Erskine is also married and likewise resides in Chicago; Pernella, the only daughter, and eldest child, died at the age of six years. In 1841, Mr. and Mrs. Oaks left their eastern home and traveled toward the then little village of Chicago.

They continued farther and located in Waukegan, where Mr. Oaks erected a log cabin and purchased 80 acres of government land at $1.25 per acre.

Their pioneer life was one of many severe trials and hardships, but unceasing and untiring efforts finally rewarded them for their labors and they succeeded in acquiring enough of the world's goods to care for them during the later years of their lives.

About five years ago Mr. Oaks was called to his last resting place, and Mrs. Oaks has since made her home with her son, Theron.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at one o'clock from the Baptist church, Rev. Hain officiating, and interment was made in the Waukegan cemetery beside her husband.

Too much cannot be said in praise of "Aunt Lavina," as she was familiarly known by in this vicinity. Her kind and sympathetic nature and ambitious and energetic spirit won for her countless friends, and her death is a signal for universal mourning. We extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved relatives.

THE WOMAN IN BLACK AGAIN

She is Now in Another Town According to the Waukegan Daily Sun.

The "Woman in Black," whose nightly visitations some weeks ago wrought the village of Barrington to a high pitch of nervousness, has now made her appearance in the little country village of Aptakisic and is there continuing her prowls in the dark hours of the night.

The citizens of the neighborhood are aroused and pass sleepless nights watching for her, at least so the reports state which come from the town.

She is becoming emboldened so those who have seen her state and has on two or three occasions given chase to those who have met her. She appears suddenly and then fades away. She silently treads the streets. She is everywhere and nowhere. The superstitious think her supernatural.

What she is, where she comes from or where she goes to, no one knows. One man, Nick Filtz, had cause to return home late at night. He took the precaution to carry a revolver.

The "woman in black" accosted him with outstretched arms and flowing robes. He drew his weapon and leveled it at her. There was a swift movement of the atmosphere, a silent rush of wind and he was alone.

The tension is now becoming as great in the neighborhood of Aptakisic as it was at Barrington, and the mystery remains as insolvable. Who is the "woman in black"?—Waukegan Sun.

Peace With the Sword.

Mexico has deemed it necessary to send out with an expedition to deal with the situation in the Yagui country. The expedition is composed of the Yagui Indians by Mexican authorities and alleged acts of retaliation on the part of the Indians. The report is very formidable, but rests for evidence upon the statements of managers of commercial enterprises in the districts where the Yaguis are supposed to hold forth in the usual manner for savages. These gentlemen deny that the Mexican authorities oppress the Indians and also deny the reported slaughter some months ago of 100 whites by the Indians. Specifically it is declared that only one murder was committed by the Yaguis in the nine months preceding the report, and the victim in this case lost his life by his own folly in traveling through the Yagui country without a military escort.

There surely must be something doing in Bismarck not good for the health of civilized man when the government in power finds it necessary to keep troops in the region and to furnish armed guards for every traveler across the country. Not long ago the Mexican authorities forcibly deported a large body of Yaguis to the southern interior. The critics of these Indians are like that of the Boers in South Africa. They want to live their own lives and not be pushed to the wall by outsiders who come into their territory to exploit the mines and get away with the wealth. They fight when meddled with, and the continued menace of armed troops stalking about is not the least sort of a pacifier of hot Indian blood. Extermination is the doom of the Yaguis, for it has long since been demonstrated that in "the eternal war" between the white man and the Indian the child of the forest has no show.

Saving Niagara.

The report of the American members of the international waterways commission, which the president cited in his recent message to congress urging the salvation of the falls of Niagara, takes the ground that it is worth while to set aside valuable property anywhere for pleasure purposes. The commercial value of Niagara as a source of water power is not too great to be sacrificed. The visitors to the falls every year are now said to be 800,000. It is a safe bet that if the American people imagined the grand spectacle would have to go the number of visitors would run up into the millions.

It is plain that the falls cannot be kept intact without the co-operation of Canada. And the friends of the project cannot get busy too soon, for at the very time the report referred to was in the hands of the American executive nearly a score of Canadian municipalities contiguous to Niagara were urging their government to increase the distribution of water power of the falls to "the reachable municipalities of Ontario."

Advertising pays if done right. THE REVIEW is the right medium.

Habit Is Spelling.

One of the spelling reformers is reported to have said: "The first aim will be to create such chaos that everybody will spell to suit himself. After that point has been reached reform will be a snap. Every one who will be at sea and will gladly accept a simplified and improved system." Phonetic spelling is supposed to represent the pronunciation of the language, but it is well known that our language is not everywhere pronounced the same way, and there is no likelihood that it ever will be. Artemus Ward and Josh Billings had different ways of getting the vernacular down to its simplest elements. The work of stenographers is seldom alike, for each shorthand writer adopts an individual system of the stems, curves, dots, hooks, loops and their combinations. Chaos is found when shorthand writers attempt to read strange notes, and the same is almost certain to occur whenever the masses set out to imitate the spelling freaks.

Our English language is complicated in its spelling and pronunciation because it is made up of fragments taken from other tongues. The speech of all ages from the Greek down to the present has been drawn upon to build up the English, and the fragments have been retained in a form to indicate their origin. These forms are fixed in the public mind, and it will be next to impossible to eradicate them even on the ground of practical simplicity. We are too much hurried to stop and think how to spell, and as a matter of fact, phonetic spelling amounts to nothing in the way of securing uniformity with simplicity would be an arbitrary as our present method. If learning were confined to the few, as was the case in all civilized lands a century or so ago, and that few represented the least strenuous elements of their communities, the new form of spelling might get on as a "fad" if launched in the right way to appeal to human vanity. But with our education is well high universal among the common people. It may be taken for granted that the old folks are too much "not in their wits" to go to school again and take up "newfangled" spelling. To make a spelling reform really effective millions of youngsters would have to be drilled day after day and year after year, for their forbears were in the heyday of Webster's "Speller" when the spelling exercises had a large place in the work of a school day. If the leaders in education can inaugurate a hot footed campaign, side tracking meanwhile some other studies, radical changes can be made, and when the reform is carried to a finish people will wonder that it was not done before.

Regulating Life Insurance.

The action of the house judiciary committee in the matter of insurance regulation by congress may be final as far as the government control of the business in the states are concerned. The committee holds that insurance does not come under the provisions of the interstate commerce laws and that federal attempt to regulate it would invade and impair the power of the states. But this conclusion does not necessarily close the question of congressional interference in a moral way. It has been proposed that the government regulate and supervise insurance operations in the territories and in the District of Columbia. Any company which failed to take out a license to operate in the restricted field would be held to advertise its unwillingness to face the scrutiny of government inspection. Companies which could enjoy government approval would then have the advantage in the states over their unlicensed rivals.

Over 1,000,000 patriotic persons, chiefly school children, clipped in that $25,000 which has preserved the house where Betty Ross wrought the first American flag. The agitation for safeguarding this relic has been going on for years, and the quaint little building in the wholesale district of Philadelphia became in consequence a shrine to attract pilgrims from all over the country.

The German miners of Westphalia showed that "blood is thicker than water" when they went provisions, money and appliances over the mountains to relieve the frightful mine horror in France. And this exhibition of universal kinship took place just when the rulers of France and Germany were snarling at each other over the pitiful Morocco business.

Paris now claims a population of 3,000,000. When the new Berlin census comes out with 3,000,000 France and Germany will be likely to appeal to "blood and iron" in disputing whether the old man is a bona fide Berliner or a strutting Frenchman, who should be counted in the gay town of parties vous.

It must be galling to those scared insurance trustees who refused those political contributions to the treasurer of the companies out of their private purses to learn from District Attorney Jerome that they did not have to give up the goods, for the law can't hurt them.

Russia's Liberal Wedge.

Enough of the drift of discussion among the people of Russia during the elections of the national assembly has been shown to show that there is great dissatisfaction with the provisions for a parliament that is to exist and operate subject almost wholly to the will of the czar. Some six months ago the autocrat voluntarily effaced himself and declared that no law in the empire should be enforceable "without the approval of the state duma." Recently he has taken the path out of that provision by declaring in a new pronouncement that the right to originate and enforce laws during the intervals of the parliament is reserved to the crown. It appears that the assembly is to have no power of impeachment, that the czar's ministers will not be responsible to the people's representatives and the czar may dissolve the chambers at will.

But Nicholas for some purpose of his own, no doubt, has put the control of Russia's purse in the hands of the assembly absolutely. In other lands this power has often worked as a savior of the people's liberties. It is a good asset to trade upon, for monarchs are always in financial hot water. In the Russian revolution the people's demands were conceded little by little, because the government was on the verge of financial shipwreck, and the key to the treasure chest was in the hands of the masses. England went through the same experience. She had a parliament for 300 years before the ministers of the king became responsible to the house of commons. And when the house of commons got control of the treasure it extorted one privilege after another from the crown until it became, as now, all but omnipotent. At this moment the czar's government is hard put for money. Hundreds of millions will be needed to stave off national bankruptcy, and the money lenders of France, who have financed Russia in the past, refuse to do so longer unless their former loans and all new ones are ratified by a national assembly. These shrewd men see that it is only a question of time when the people will rule in Russia and are taking no chances on wholesale repudiation. This then is the entering wedge to complete political power for Russian liberalism—the ability to cut off the czar's supplies. With a firm grip on the national purse the people's representatives can reduce the autocrat to the status of a mere figurehead, like the king of England.

The High Court of the Nation.

It is indicative of the conservative nature of the conservative court of the United States that this high tribunal has had but seven chief justices, not counting Rutledge, whose tenure was nominal, since its establishment under Washington's administration 117 years ago. Chief Justice Fuller, the present incumbent, with eighteen years of service, has succeeded the average by ten years. Marshall served for thirty-four years, and Marshall and Taney together occupied the chief justiceship for sixty-three years from 1801 to 1864.

A justice of the supreme court may hold office "during good behavior." The chief justice is paid a salary of $13,000, and the associate justices draw $12,500 a year. Several of the associate justices have made long records on the bench, among them Story and Field, who each served thirty-four years. McLean of Ohio and Wayne of Georgia each served thirty-two years. Bushrod of Virginia served thirty-one years, and Harlan has a record of twenty-nine years. As a rule, the justices have remained in office until death. They cannot be compelled to retire except by impeachment.

The first census of the British empire, just completed, classifies King Edward's 400,000,000 odd subjects by religions, as Hindus, Mohammedans, Christians, Buddhists, and so on. It is noticeable, however, that the native Britishers are not classified according to their innumerable faiths in the census, for the reason apparently that they hold it inconvenient to have their particular religious belief spread on the record for "daws to peck at."

The late Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney wrote books that appealed to girls, but books the boys read, for the most kind of girls figured in them, and healthy minded boys want to read books with wholesome, merry, well behaved heroines. Mrs. Whitney's girls were not little prigs, neither "tuckered maidens," but sensible youngsters and fit models for anybody's sisters and cousins.

Tony Pastor, the old time vaudeville favorite, is to return to the stage and sing a few songs to celebrate the forty-first anniversary of his debut as a manager. He is possibly moved to merrily also by reflecting on how much luckier it is in this age of Celerium for a man over seventy to be a variety singer than a government clerk, for instance.

A father of seven in St. Louis suggests that the public spirited folks of that ambitious city might do a practical turn in the way of booming the population to a million by warring upon high rents and the high cost of living generally. Here is a hint, too, for anti-rent outside agitators.

Worry and Long Life.

One of the best which celebrated last St. Patrick's day was a mother of fourteen children, the first of whom may have been born close upon a century ago. This daughter of Erin is 117 years old and says she expects and intends to keep up celebrating for years to come. She accounts for her long life and good health on the ground that she always goes in for a good time and never takes a moment's sleep. Those fourteen babies produced "jess growed," like Topsy, and gave the mother more joy than anxiety all through life. They worried one another, of course, but the level headed mother stood aloof and let them face their own trials and battles, and got tumbled at an age when troubles don't hurt much.

There is a point in this cheerful centenarian's philosophy of life which is very captivating to the present generation—that is, having a "good time." Another philosopher has said "Life would be tolerable but for its pleasures," and this love of a good time is apt to end in a mad race for pleasures. Centenarians have come to that estate along roads strewn with cares, and as we look about upon our aged friends we find them, as rule, much given to what old timers called "tewing." They may vex other people with their advice and fears, but they also vex themselves and live on in spite of it. These good souls think that they have something to live for, and they persist in living in order to finish their tasks. Life was always serious with them, but care didn't kill them just the same. It is the continuous pleasure seeker who puts in worry that wears the bearings. He frets before the picnic, during the picnic and after the picnic, and after fretting is the most corroding of all. Let us all try to worry and to seek and find a good time at it, providing the worry has a wholesome end in view.

The Right Kind of Immigrants.

The majority of Americans agree with the sentiment of Commissioner Watchorn, who recently said: "We cannot have too much immigration of the right kind. We cannot have too little of the wrong kind." Immigration has made this country what it is today, and the blood of several nationalities that came over originally in immigrant ships courses in the veins of the most of us. It is not the quantity of the immigration to be feared, but the quality of the bulk of it. As the inspection system is now regulated at Ellis Island, where Commissioner Watchorn is on guard, there is little danger that undesirable immigrants will get in. Last year the steamship companies turned away 20,000 applicants for passage to the United States because they saw that they were the kind not wanted here and would have to be transported back gratis.

It is said that three-fourths of the immigrants now admitted are between the ages of eighteen and forty-four, representing the youth and energy of the European peasantry—the spirit and muscle to carry forward the development already begun. Commissioner Watchorn reports that 70 per cent of the newcomers go straight to the agricultural states, 18 per cent drift into the mills of the east, and the remainder stay over for a season in New York and other Atlantic ports. The right place for the immigrants is where muscle is needed—that is, the interior districts of the country—and those who seek such environment from choice may safely be welcomed as the right kind.

Editor Francis, the new ambassador to Austria, is a fair sample of the aristocracy of brains, the only kind of aristocracy we care about booming in this country. Like his father, he began life's hustle setting type. As a diplomat he has followed in his father's footsteps, first as minister to Greece and now in the Austrian embassy. Family histories would repeat themselves oftener if the youngsters were more inclined to "go slow and learn to peddle."

A society stickler for the "proper thing" says that Americans must stop addressing gentlemen as "Mr." and go back to the old stately suffix "Esq." It took a long time to put "Esq." out of business, although it never was a good fit, and it will be next to impossible to suppress "Mr.," which is always on the tip of the tongue and is very democratic anyway.

Washington weather gave a continuous horrible example this year of what March can do in the way of making an early inauguration day miserable for all concerned. Friends of the April date are dinging this object lesson to the heads of congressmen and senators to urge the change of date proposition.

Hunting for the north pole in automobile is just the thing. If there is a globe standing "all by its lonesome" anywhere in the frozen north the auto will be sure to bump into it.

One of the greatest food selling firms in Russia has failed. Considering the way the government continues to cut down the army of consumers, this is scarcely surprising.

OVER THE PRECIPICE.

A Thrilling Adventure in a Blizzard in the Antarctic.

Here is an adventure in the antarctic regions taken from Captain Robert F. Scott's "The Voyage of the Discovery." Nine men are returning from a sledge expedition in a blizzard. The snow is "an unusually violent squal prevented us from seeing even one another. I immediately ordered a chain to be formed at right angles and extending across our track, each man keeping in touch with the rest, with the idea of intercepting Hare, who was missing, when he came on. We shouted and blew whistles, and while this was going on Evans stepped back on to a patch of bare, smooth ice and shot out of sight immediately. Thinking the slope to be one of the short ones so common in the folds of the hills, Evans sat down and deliberately started to slide in Evans' track. In a moment or two the slope grew steeper, and soon he was going at a pace which left him no power to control his movements. He whipped out his clasp knife and dug it into the ice, but the blade snapped off short and failed to check his wild career. In a flash the ice changed to snow, which grew softer until, in a moment of flying particles, his rapid flight was arrested and he stood up to find Evans within a few feet of him.

A third man joined them in similar fashion: "Realizing the impossibility of ascending again by the way they had come, they started to descend, but within four paces the snow which they had been brought to rest they found that the slope ended suddenly in a steep precipice, beyond which they could see nothing but the clouds of swirling snow. Even as they recoiled from this new danger and dimly realized the merciful patch of snow which had saved them from it, a yelping dog flew past them, and in a moment at the icy slope, and disappeared forever into the gloom beyond." The six others eventually moved on until they, too, found themselves on an awkward slope. "Their leader, however, saw the precipice beneath his feet and far below, through the swirling snow, the sea."

"Another step would have taken him over the edge. He sprang back with a cry of warning, and those behind him, hearing it, dug their heels instinctively into the surface, and, with one exception, all succeeded in stopping. What followed was over in an instant. Before his horror-stricken companions had time to think poor Vince, unable to check himself with his soft foot boots, had shot from among them, dashed past the leader and disappeared." Vince was never seen again, but Hare, the first missing man, staggered back to the ship two days later, remembering nothing between struggling to a patch of rock for shelter and waking thirty-six hours later covered with snow.

THE MAN ON FOOT.

In Stamboul He Has No Rights as Against the Horsemen.

One of the peculiarities in Stamboul is the insolent demeanor of the horseman to the footman. Many times daily you will see some rascal of a cabman trying to drive down a street, and a man on the street. The drivers rarely take the trouble to shout as they approach pedestrians. I was often filled with wonder at observing the mere man with which we are so much in contact submitted to such treatment from shabby Turks on carriage boxes. Even when no injury was done to such a pedestrian, he was often bespattered with mud. Stamboul then is a very unpleasant place in which to live. Were cabmen in our country to treat pedestrians so recklessly there would be many cases of assault and battery, and I think some mortality among the Jews.

One day I saw a uniformed Turk picking his way across the street, using his saber as a walking stick. A carriage suddenly drove down on him, and its driver, after nearly running over him, buried at him a volley of what sounded like choice Turkish abuse. The uniformed Turk retaliated not. He scraped the mud off his uniform, stuck his saber under his arm and waded ashore. In our country a man with a saber would have used it on the driver's back. By the way, I mean that the Turks are lacking in spirit—far from it, but apparently it would seem to be the custom of the country that the man on foot, as against the man on horseback, has no rights.—"A Levantine Log Book," by Jerome Hart.

Class According to Order.

Bill Handy of Marlborough, an ardent Republican during the anti-slavery agitation, caught fish and sold clams for a livelihood. One of his customers, a strong Democrat, ordered some clams and told him to give him out of the "black abolition heads." When he delivered them he said, "Mr. Brown, here are your clams; read Boston Her-ald bodies and no heads."—Boston Her-ald.

Possible Explanation.

An old hen was pecking at some stray carpet tacks in the back yard.

"Now, what do you suppose that foot hen is eating those tacks for?" said Homer.

"Perhaps," rejoined his better half, "she is going to lay a carpet."—Chicago News.

A Lesson in Patience.

There are two women in the waiting room at the railway station. One of them is tall and thin and of the appearance which is sometimes described as nervous, yet she sits with folded hands, placidly gazing at nothing. The other woman is plump and pretty. By every evidence of feature and build she should be jolly and contented, yet she is fidgeting around. She cannot sit in one place more than two minutes. She gets up and walks to the door and looks out the window. She keeps looking about incessantly, and from time to time she sighs anxiously.

"May I ask," inquired the tall, thin woman, "if there is any worry on your mind?"

"Yes, there is," responds the plump, pretty woman. "I am waiting for my husband."

"But that should not worry you. How long have you been waiting?"

"It's—let me see—what time is it? It's forty minutes now."

"Forty minutes?" My dear woman, I've been waiting for my husband for forty years, yet you see I am not one-thousandth as nervous as you."—Memphis News-Sentinel.

Professional Women Thieves.

The ingenuity displayed by professional women thieves in concealing stolen jewelry is a thing to be wondered at. It is imperative that the women searchers employed in police stations be alert and intelligent. An important duty of a searcher is to examine the mouth of a prisoner. The other day, after this had been done and the thief even made to raise her tongue, a valuable ring was seen to drop from her lips while she was saluting a woman who was passing. The woman frequently used as a hiding place for jewelry, while the lining of jackets and shoes is a popular place for concealment. Needless to say, the position of searcher is not an altogether agreeable one, and perhaps the duty she dislikes most, owing to its monotony, is that of sitting up with prisoners whom it is deemed expedient to watch. Women prisoners when once in the station are said to be rarely violent. For instance, the genuine professional pickpocket seldom gives the slightest trouble. She knows she is caught and makes the best of a bad job. "But," observed one searcher, "a drop of drink will change some of 'em wonderful."—New York Tribune.

Calling Back Stage Art.

The spectacle of the Russian play actors now performing in the chief cities of the country should bring Americans to regard the regaling of personality as the art of acting. It is the A B C of the stage, but this generation has yet to learn it. A very large class of intelligent people no longer attend the theater, not only because the average play is silly or uninteresting, but because the acting no longer creates the illusion of reality. More than any other art, the art of acting must hold the mirror up to nature. Our people's stars hold the mirror up to themselves.

With these Russian players the drama and the art to interpret it are the real thing. Beside their earnest effort to place the dramatist and his message above the actor, our exploitation of vain and physically attractive actors has become a hollow sham. No the managers and native playwrights deal in personalities, the Russians offer characters with something to say.

BLACK FRIDAY.

The Mad Scene in the Gold Room on That Fateful Occasion.

In the middle of the gold room was a small fountain. Around this the day's proceedings began, writes T. Hendrick in the American Magazine. Jay Gould's own brokers, pale, haggard, half-drunken and half-maddened by their work, started the bids. Gold had closed the day previously at 144. Now a Gould broker offered 145 for $100,000 gold.

His only response were the curses and fat shakings of a bedraggled, perspiring crowd.

"One hundred and forty-six for $100,000 gold."

Still there was no response.

"One hundred and forty-seven."

Each advancing point meant millions in profits to Gould and likewise millions in losses to the community.

At every advance the crowd, losing all restraint, alternately roared and wept.

"One hundred and forty-eight."

"One hundred and forty-nine."

"One hundred and fifty."

At this point the buying began. Hitherto the crowd had been held magically in spellbound silence. The volatility of the Gould brokers had paralyzed all. Board brokers were particularly dazed. In face of the clique's demonstrated power no one seemed able to bid, even to make the feeblest attempt to check the terrible rise.

A few upstart merchants now, however, started to purchase. Soon the bidding degenerated into panic. Every one scrambled to get his gold now while the price, judged by what had already happened and the unquestioned power of the gang, seemed low. All purchases, however, meant enormous losses.

Fortunes accumulated through years of self-sacrificing toil were swept away in a moment. In their crane men ran aimlessly about the room, moaning, screaming, vainly appealing for help. Outside, where the crowds breathlessly waited in suspense, the same scenes were repeated. Ruined men, unable to get into the building itself, pushed, cursed and fought. At each rise in the price the rage against Gould increased. When the bid reached 150 there were cries of "Lynch! Lynch!"

And meanwhile what was the plotter of all this mischief doing? He was selling. To whom was he selling? To Fisk and all his own associates. He was the only man who really understood the situation—how knew that, it is upon what a flimsy basis his "corner" rested. He sent Fisk, Belden and Speyer into the gold room to advance the price ostensibly for the benefit of the clique, and when it had reached a certain point unloaded on his own account. He had sold largely, unknown to his confederates, the day before.

The Greatest of Rivers.

The Amazon is the king of streams. From first to last it receives over 1,200 tributaries, of which more than 100 are large sized rivers and rise so far apart and have their floods and ebbs at such different seasons that the Amazon is at about the same height the year around. At some points on its lower course one bank is invisible from the other. The beholder seems to be looking on a great yellow sea of fresh water. When discovered, some tribes of Indians on the lower portion know nothing of the existence of the opposite shore and did not believe that it existed, saying that "the great river flowed all around the world." Its mouth, including that of the Para, is 180 miles in width, and it is navigable for large sized ocean steamers, for 1,600 miles from the sea, and so vast is the flood that the ocean is tinged yellow for 400 miles from the coast of Brazil.

The Achaean League.

The Achaean league was formed by the twelve towns of Achaia for protection against foreign aggression. It was broken up by Alexander the Great, but reorganized by C. 280 and again dissolved by C. 147. The second of these leagues comprised all the best cities of the Peloponnese, and, indeed, most of the cities and states of Greece. It was this league which contended with the Romans for the independence of Greece; but, its troops being defeated by Metellus Scarpaeus and by Mummius near Corinth, the league was dissolved, and all Greece submitted to the Roman domination.

Tough Eating.

Those who have partaken of peacock food should not suppose him to be decidedly tough eating. While it is said of the swan that the fact of its ever having been a familiar dish speaks highly in favor of ancient English cuisine, it should not be forgotten that when boudoirs and boudoir heads were as common as straws and radishes now are there were scarcely any vegetables to eat with them.

Why He Was Timid.

"Why do you avoid the man to whom I introduced you?" He is very agreeable and interesting.

"I avoid meeting agreeable and interesting people," answered the misanthrope. "That was how I came to get my life insured in a bad company."—Washington Star.

THE GREAT K&A TRAIN ROBBERY

BY PAUL LEXINGTON FORD, Author of "The Pink Panther Mystery"

"I have dismissed the sheriff and his posse, and I gave them a hundred dollars for their work, and three bottles of pretty good whisky I got on my car. Unless they get orders from elsewhere, you will not hear any further from them."

"You must let me reimburse what expense we have put you to, Mr. Gordon. I only wish I could as easily repay your kindness."

Nodding his head in assent, as well as in recognition of his thanks, I continued, "It was my duty, as an official of the K. & A., to recover the stolen mail, and I had to do it."

"We understand that," said Mr. Cullen. "And do not for a moment blame you."

"But," I went on, for the first time looking at Madge, "it is not my duty to take part in a contest for control of the K. & A., and I shall therefore act in this case as I should in any other loss of mail."

"And that is—?" asked Frederic.

"I am about to telegraph for instructions from Washington," I replied.

"As the O. S. R. by trickery has dishonestly tied up some of your proxies, they ought not to object if we do the same by honest means; and I think I can manage so that Uncle Sam will prevent those proxies from being voted at Ash Forks on Friday."

If a galvanic battery had been applied to the group about the breakfast table, it would have made a bigger change. Madge clapped her hands in joy; Mr. Cullen said, "God bless you!" with real feeling; Frederic jumped up and slapped me on the shoulder, crying, "Gordon, you're the biggest old tramp breathing!" while Albert and the captain shook hands with each other, in evident jubilation. Only Lord Ralies remained passive.

"Have you breakfasted?" asked Mr. Cullen, when the first joy was over.

"Yes," I said. "I only stopped in on my way to the station to telegraph the postmaster-general."

"May I come with you and see what you say?" cried Fred, jumping up.

I nodded, and Miss Cullen said, questioningly, "Mr. too!" making me very happy by the question, for it showed that she would speak to me. I gave an assent quite as eagerly and in a moment we were all walking to the platform. Despite Lord Ralies, I felt happy, and especially as I had not dreamed that she would ever forgive me.

I took a telegraph blank, and, putting it to me that Miss Cullen could see what I said, wrote:

"Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C. I hold, against your instructions, the three registered letters stolen from No. 3 Overland Missouri Western Express on Monday, October fourth, loss of which has already been notified you."

Then I paused and said, "So far, that's routine, Miss Cullen. Now comes the help for you, and I continued—

"The letters may have been tampered with, and I recommend a special agent. Reply Flagstaff, Arizona."

"What that dot?" she asked.

"I'm not much at prophesy, and we'll wait for the reply," I said.

All that day we lay at Flagstaff, and after a good sleep, as there was no use keeping the party cooped up in their car, I drummed up some ponies and took the Cullens and Ackland over to the Indian cliff-dwellings. I don't think Lord Ralies gave any thing by staying behind in a walk, for

I'm so grateful for the trouble you took."

"It was a pleasure," I said.

"And, Mr. Gordon," she continued, and then hesitated for a moment—

"The sheriff told me that you—you said you honored me for—"

"I do," I exclaimed energetically, as she paused and colored.

"Do you really?" she cried. "I thought Fred was only trying to make me less unhappy by saying that you did."

"I said it, and I meant it," I told her.

"I have been so miserable over that lie," she went on; "but I thought if I let you have the letters it would ruin papa. I really wouldn't mind poverty myself, Mr. Gordon, but I couldn't take pride in success that I couldn't be the one to do it. And then, after you told me that to take-trouble was hung, I had to lie to save them. I ought to have known you would help me."

I thought this a pretty good time to make a real apology for my conduct on the trail, as well as to tell her how much I was at not having been able to repay her as I wished.

She accepted my apology very sweetly, and assured me her belongings had been put away so neatly that she only had her own things to pack.

I had thought it was best to have said this out of kindness, and told her so, telling also of my struggles over that pink-beribboned and belated affair, in a way that made her laugh.

hold her hand after she was down, while he said something to her, made me grit my teeth and look the other way. None of the riders had seen me, so I slipped to my car and sat back to work. Fred came in presently to see if I was up yet, and to ask me to lunch, but I felt so miserable and downhearted that I made an excuse of my late breakfast for not joining them.

After luncheon the party in the other special all came out and walked up and down the platform, a sort of their voices and laughter only making me feel the bluer. Before long I heard a rap on one of my windows, and there was Miss Cullen peering in at me. The moment I looked up, she called:

"Won't you make one of us, Mr. Mianthrop?"

I called myself all sorts of a fool, but I went as eagerly as if there had been some hope. Miss Cullen began to tease me over my sudden access of energy, declaring that she was sure it was a pose for their benefit, or else due to a guilty conscience over having slept so late.

"I hoped you would ride with us, though I knew it would take up your time. Apparently there is nothing to see in Ash Forks."

"There is something that may interest you all," I suggested, pointing to the platform.

"I thought this a pretty good time to make a real apology for my conduct on the trail, as well as to tell her how much I was at not having been able to repay her as I wished."

MINISTER IS FOUND GUILTY

Elders of Nazareth Church of Peoria Expel the Pastor.

Rev. John R. Southey, formerly pastor of the Nazareth church of Peoria, has been found guilty of embezzlement, abandonment of his family and embezzlement. He was tried before the elders of his church, who expelled him from the church.

The charge of embezzlement was against Miss May Shawgo, a member of his congregation, who is said to have left her home for him, but who cannot be located now. The trial of Southey was secret. The preacher refused to be present or make any defense. He is now under indictment by the grand jury on the charge of living unlawfully with Miss Shawgo.

BISHOP SPALDING IS AT PEORIA

Arrives Home Improved in Health After Three Months' Absence.

Bishop John Lancaster Spalding of the diocese of Peoria has returned to his home in Peoria, after an absence of three months in the south in search of health. The bishop has refused to discuss his alleged candidacy for the cardinalship. The prelate, accompanied by his sister, Mrs. John Sliven, left Peoria early in the winter for St. Augustine, Fla., but found the climate too severe for him, and was removed to the mountains near Hot Springs, Ark., where he has spent the last eight weeks. The bishop is greatly improved in health, and is able to walk long distances. He expects to again take up active duties in the church.

FALLS TO DEATH FROM CUPOLA. Labor of Love Costa Churchman's Life at Jacksonville.

Louis Pechioff fell to his death while working on the cupola at Jacksonville. Pechioff was engaged in a labor of love with a fellow member of the church and was fixing the cornice of the cupola. There are two cupolas on the roof and Pechioff fell from the scaffold around the highest one to the ridge of the lower one, and there his body was caught by the gutter ledge. His companion saw him stagger and fall to the roof and rushed to his aid. He supported the body and called for assistance to remove the body. Apoplexy is supposed to have caused Pechioff to fall.

Trainman Is Acquitted. At Peoria "Jap" Smith was declared not guilty of manslaughter in connection with the wreck of the Santa Fe Limited near Chillicothe, Jan. 29. Smith admitted negligence, but the defense produced testimony to show that the conductor of the train, George Wetherill, also been negligent. This negligence, it was shown, was subsequent to that of Smith's and the court ruled that it was the direct cause of the wreck and the loss of life incident to the catastrophe. The court ruled that the defense was good and the jury was ordered to find a verdict acquitting the defendant. Four persons were killed in the wreck, which occurred the day before the wreck on the Santa Fe at Laura, in which several persons were injured.

Yes. Each has 100 cents. But you know, and we know that 100 cents will get MORE and BETTER things in some places than in others. That is why we buy Toys direct from Germany, Hosiery straight from southern mills, etc., etc. Are you as careful about YOUR buying? You wouldn't hire out for $1.50 when others get $1.35? Several of the friends of G. H. Arps from Barrington came down on the 6:15 train Tuesday evening, and walked in upon Mr. Arps unbeknown to him and he was so very much surprised it took him a few moments to fully recover after which he greeted his old time friends with a glad handshake. Several of the Palatine people had been invited in and progressive church was played, the first prizes being awarded to Miss Elvora Arps and Bert Smith and the consolation prizes to Mrs. Frank Wright and Billy Williams, after which refreshments and a general good time was enjoyed until they left to take the midnight train, promising to come again and surprise Mr. Arps, although he is one of the fellows who can never be surprised, you know.

International Theatre, Chicago. The International Theatre has been enjoying an unprecedented business. In fact, the patronage of this popular house since Manager W. S. Cleveland inaugurated his "great vaudeville" has increased until it is now the leading vaudeville theatre in Chicago. The reason is found in high quality and novelty of the acts presented. Beginning Monday, April 9, another galaxy of star performers will be seen. The ultra attraction will be Hill and Silviu, acknowledged to be the most sensational uncircled act in the world. It astonished and electrified the French and Austro audiences before coming to this country and their great acts will be produced in their entirety. During the recent past this pair of talented performers broke all records for the long runs at Hammerstein's theatre in New York. Another European act will be presented by Green Bros., the vaudeville comedy duo and that Jugglers who were hidden to amuse the eccentric Shah of Persia. Caroline Kelly McCard and company in a new playlet. Their performance is worth provoking and at the same time marvellous in its dexterity. Philbrooks and Reynolds, an actress and actor of fame will offer their prize comedy comic in one act entitled "Miss Steep, Steepographer," while Krescos, Connelly and Gazelle, a trio of burnt cork singers and dancers will entertain with new specialties. Sleaz and Warren who, through their popularity with Chicago audiences have p. o. ven a big hit the past week, have been induced to put off their Boston engagement and will continue for another week. A half dozen other great numbers will make up a show seldom seen.
