INDIAN LODGES.

Homes of the Savages in the Days of the Buffalo.

While in buffalo days some of the wild Indians of the plains occupied permanent dwellings during a part of the year, there were others who lived wholly in movable lodges.

These were made of buffalo skins tanned white and sewed together. They were of different sizes, the poor occupying smaller lodges, while the wealthy man, he who owned many horses, very likely had a large family and required a larger lodge. The size of a man's lodge was to some extent an indication of his wealth. Two horses were needed to drag the poles of a large lodge and one to carry the lodge itself, these horses for the transportation of the dwelling above, to say nothing of the other property and the different members of the family.

A lodge of moderate size required eleven skins, and eighteen poles were needed to set it up. A sixteen skin lodge required twenty-two poles. The larger the lodge the greater was the number of poles needed. From the fact that they used an unusual number of poles in setting up their lodges it resulted that the Cheyennes had well stretched, nice looking lodges.

The northern Cheyennes declare that an old number of hides was always used for the best lodges, and the number might range from eleven to twenty-one. The skins were sewed together with sinew thread. First, of course, the hides must be tanned, the hair removed and the skin softened. Then the Cheyenne woman held a sewing bee which was not unlike the bees of our ancestors in the nearby area of the country. She invited her friends to come and help her sew her lodge and provided them with refreshments. Among them was always one woman especially skilful in cutting out the lodges, and she fitted the skins together before the women began to sew them.—Forest and Stream.

HOLDING A CAMERA.

Some Practical Suggestions to the Beginner in Photography.

One of the most important lessons for a beginner to learn is to hold the camera in the proper position during exposure. Whether there are corners of buildings or other objects which give vertical lines the camera must be held absolutely level. If this is not done the building in the picture will appear to be falling either backward or forward, according to the way in which the camera was tilted.

There are times, however, when the camera may be tilted to an advantage. In some cases it is an absolute necessity. For example, in photographs of clouds, waterfalls, balloons, etc., the camera may be tilted upward, while in taking pictures of people swimming or bathing, children at work or play, etc., it may be pointed downward.

Very successful photographs of prominent speakers, parades, crowds, etc., have been taken when the camera was upside down. It makes no difference in the negative whether the camera is right side up or not. By holding the camera in the way suggested many a photographer has secured good pictures, while others who tried to use the camera in the usual way made absolute failures.

Often by holding the camera by the side of the body and pointing it backward one may secure pictures of children at play and of other people in natural poses without the knowledge of any members of the group.

Another warning to beginners is necessary. Do not try to take a time exposure while holding the camera in the hand. Even if the camera is held against the breast and respiration stopped the action of the heart is sufficient to cause the box to vibrate and spoil the picture.—Circle Magazine.

Stripped at the Law.

Dickens describes in his novel "Bleak House" the case of one who was involved in suits in the chancery court and the delays to which they were subjected before the English judicial procedure was reformed. Tradition says that an artist's representation of the same idea is much less space. Two authors in chancery, being reconciled to each other after a very tedious and expensive suit, applied to him to paint a device to commemorate of their return to peace and amity. He gave them entire satisfaction by painting them in the act of shaking hands—one clad in his shirt, the other without even that.

Wants More Than Beauty.

The modern Englishman has more cool common sense than his great-grandfather. A beautiful woman attracts his eye, and he may have a passing fascination, but that feeling is only a transient one unless Miss Beauty has other recommendations. If he cannot get beauty combined with usefulness, he goes in for plainness.—London Women's Life.

Close Application.

"Now that you are about to go to college, my son, let me enjoy you to best in mind one thing."

"What is that, dad?"

"It is this, my boy—the greatest results are always achieved by close application."

"Why, dad, you talk just like a poor plasterer!"—Stray Stories.

Yes, Indeed.

A man may have a heart big enough to love two women at one time, but he ought to have more head.—Smart Set.

About 45 couples attended the dance in the Oakland Hall last Saturday evening. C. A. Hapke's McHenry orchestra, assisted by William Tidmarsh of this place, furnished music for the occasion.

Our junior ball team defeated a picked team of choir boys Monday afternoon in an interesting and well played game, the score being 7 to 4. Alvin Kimball was on the firing line for us with Charley Garland, Jr., acting as receiver-in-chief.

Rowdy tactics marred the ball game last Sunday afternoon when Cary lost to Waukegan by a score of 9 to 8. For six innings, proceedings were moving along fairly well, but the score board was marked off in a top-heavy manner with Cary leading at 5 to get-some.

Broucheon, who had been pitching, took himself from the fingers' box in the next inning and Fred Baseley bravely took up the upgrade fight. He pitched well yet the visitors chased Harry Grantham, Jr., to the immediate vicinity of Little Lake for a few drives, while the umpire called time and the spectators napped, until Harry would reappear upon the scene of action with a loud whoop and the ball held triumphantly in his left mitt. After the batter had said "Fiddle" and the scorer had replaced the home run with a healthy ether, play would be resumed. Of course, they didn't all go that far, as Fred Griswold, who was working miracles on the rough ground at short will testify. He went down for one, but it proved to be a waste of energy as the ball came up to him. But, Fred nailed his man anyway. In like manner, also was "Pop" Schwartz entertained at short. The rowdiness occurred in the last half of the game when those attempted to remove the visiting third baseman from the line between second and third. Elmer was sailing along at full speed and we have no doubt but what he would have succeeded admirably in his purpose had not the fielder grabbed him around the waist and thrown him. Trouble was in the air at once and so was Kelsey. He rushed to his comrade's assistance and landed on the visitor's countenance. Umpire Kimberly stepped between them and the combatants immediately lost sight of each other, and the affair blew over. When play was resumed, the locals used their war clubs with good effect and amassed nine tallies, while two more for the enemy, bringing their total to eight was the best they could do.
