Weems and the Cherry Tree Tale

George and the Hatchet Epitaph

By ROBERTUS LOVE

(Copyright, 1907, by Robertus Love.)

FOLLOWING is the original cherry tree and hatchet story, faithfully copied from the edition of 1860 of the "Life of George Washington" by Parson Weems.

When George, said one, "was about three years old, he was made the wealthy master of a lot of land, which he had to be divided, and the young George, being so fond of chopping every thing that came in his way, one day, in the garden, where he often found himself hacking his mother's peaches, he unluckily tried the edge of his hatchet on the body of a beautiful young cherry tree.

Is the immortal cherry tree story true or untrue? Do believe or not to believe—that is the question. No far as the fact of the tree, which was killed, it is true, that is a fact, a star of the first magnitude. Doubtless there are many good persons who trust fully that little George hacked the tree with his hatchet and owned up.

We know who first published the story. "Parson" Weems, Rev. Mason Locke Weems, one of Washington's earliest biographers did that. But it seems that the story did not appear until the fifth edition of the parson's book, which was first published two or three years after Washington's death, under the quaint title of "A

"DOUBT, DO NOT KNOW WHO KILLED THAT BEAUTIFUL CHERRY TREE!"

Parson Weems was a prodigious producer. One of his best books which he peddled through Virginia was "The Drunkard's Looking Glass, Reflecting a Faithful Libretto of the Drunken and Sturdy Very Interesting Attitudes. With Lively Representations of the Many Raging Capers Which He Cuts in His Different Stages of His Disease."

ing the girlhood at the family home, Frederick, who was the archdeacon that grew the tree that was hacked by the hatchet that George had—he had it.

George Washington was born in 1732. The hatchet incident, happening when he was six, must date from 1738. Nearly seventy years later, when it got into print for thirty years Washington had been a famous character. One is inclined to ask why Parson Weems did not use the story in his earlier edition, since he says he had known it for twenty years.

In his first edition the parson declared, right on his title page, that the matter of the book was "faithfully taken from authentic documents." When the several stories were inserted, however, we find the title page adding to "various anecdotes," with the reference to faithfulness and authentic documents altogether eliminated.

It is unfair to Parson Weems, however, to place him in comparison with historians. He was not a historian; he was an author. In whatever he wrote he made a special plea. He set out with a fixed and definite intention, and, though altogether lacking in historical accuracy, he bowed to the public of his day and for many years thereafter. More than seventy editions of Weems' "Washington" were published during the nineteenth century. In 1827 Joseph Allen of Philadelphia purchased the copyright and brought out the "twenty-seventh edition, greatly improved," though the Weems had been dead since 1825.

It can do no harm to give a brief account of Parson Weems' life. As the author of the biography of Washington he is almost as interesting as John

"I was literally choking myself to death, and had become too weak to leave my bed; and neighbors predicted that I would never leave it alive; but they got fooled, for thanks be to God, I was induced to try Dr. King's Cherry-Tree Balm, a quart of which I bought, and in a few days I was able to get up and resume my usual health."

"Six years ago I learned a valuable lesson," writes John Phelan's Magazine, "of the cherry-tree balm. Dr. King's New Life Pills, and the ointment I take them the better I find them."

"They please everybody. Guaranteed at the Barrington Pharmacy, 25c."

"I will be at my home in the Village of Barrington, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays of each week to receive taxes for my office."

Bowman Dairy Notes

We are pleased to report the health of the dairy community exceptionally good, not a case of contagious disease of any kind being noted.

Wednesday last week we were favored by a visit from Mrs. Keechger of Oak Park accompanied by Mr. Cheeseman, she also visited some of our dairies and enjoyed a trip through some of our very fine country.

We are especially pleased to note that our best dairymen are taking increased interest in their herds and premises. They recognize the dollar in it. We hope soon to see them all "best".

D. A. Peck, M. D., our bacteriologist and milk expert made us a professional visit on Monday of this week.

We hope that every dairymen will cut out the article in last week's Review on summer feeding, written by Mr. Cheeseman, and file it away for future reference.

Mr. Cheeseman is a scientific feeder of dairy cows, having for nine years managed a large farm and laboratory for the production of certified milk.
