REACHED HANDS OF MOTHER

Postal Clerk's Decision Resulted in Delivering Letter Just Where it Belonged.

The postoffice at New York city could not receive either addressed stamp.

"My Mother."

This letter came to New York, but as there were several names in New York city who have sons in Ireland, the postoffice clerk declared he had not much hope of finding the right man. It was then returned over to one of the men in the office who had the letter. It happened that on the very day of its receipt there an Irish woman came to demand delivery and send it.

"Have a year from me by?"

The fact that a woman without an card of request for such an inquiry should come at that time appealed to the clerk as being something more than a coincidence. With a view to the mother of such a son, he took the letter, observed the postmark, and asked the woman if she was the mother of the man named in the place with which the letter was addressed. She answered these were asked and the answers noted. Then she gave the woman the letter, and she returned it to the postoffice on the spot and it was not there.

"She opened it, and saw enough. It was the letter she had written."

It was really from her son in Ireland.
