SPEAR GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM

One Experience With White Man's Weapon Was Enough for African Native.

When Mr. Montagu, the English traveler, was in Africa, he gave to a native an old single-barreled gun, and the fellow was delighted. He put in a small handful of powder, and with a quarter of a newspaper on top of it, and finally a ball, and then named the white charge down. Then he departed. In the evening he returned with his face battered and swollen all most beyond recognition. "What have you been doing?" asked the English man, in amazement. The native sat down on the ground and said, sorrowfully: "A little after noon I found the track of a snake, and I followed it until I found them feeding. I crept up to one of them. It was twenty yards away. I rested the barrel of the gun on a stone, placed my feet just against my nose, directed the muzzle straight at the snake, and then the trigger. I do not know what happened, for I was blind and could not see at all, but when I came to I found my feet lying at the bottom of the gun. The snake was beside me, my feet was as you see it, and the snake had gone away. I am of a white man. It was very kind of you to give me a gun, but it is too good a gun for me; too strong, too powerful. It needs the strength of a white man to ride it. Take it back, farewell!"

HAVE GOOD IDEA OF DRESS

Many Men Possess the Artistic Eye When It Comes to Matter of Female Dressing.

There is an old tradition to the effect that men lack discretion as well as artistic eye in the selection of a becomingly groomed woman. A man's reputation was asked to denote what to his mind was a graceful dress for the beautification of the woman by figure. The result not only vindicated men of the charge of ignorance concerning the becoming feminine drape, but also showed that wisdom and artistry in designing that most delicate of the latest artistic garments, he is modestly pretty or daintily ridiculous, will do well to cultivate.

The fabric of the gown created by the mere use of a well-chosen clinging crepe de chine of shadowy blue tones. It was cut in the latest fashion, with long-sleeved, slender sleeves. The skirt was slightly rounded to show the smooth white color of the throat, and the gown hung free from the shoulders, falling in long, sweeping lines, with just a suspicion of a sweep at the back. In front an elongated flange of the blue material, arranged in a series of folds, extended a wide ridge, which was wound around the waist empire fashion, tied in an artistic knot, with a valiantly loop to the back, from whence long, loose ends, embellished with gold and blue, fell to the bottom of the skirt. The ends were gathered with gold and blue, the white gown appeared to breathe the fragrance of the flower garden. Such a gown must be in the very nature of it self, conceal any offending angularities, and it is a fact of necessity, heighten the symmetry of the softly curving lines. Grace of carriage and elegance of attire were its indubitable followers. The gown was a masterpiece, worthy the dressmaker and the artist, and when it was seen, it was a very simple.
