For The Farmer.

With an idea to give you something of special interest—something that will not only interest you but will also be of service to you, we have prepared a special issue of the Review.

It is a feature, scientific and authoritative, covering every phase of Illinois farm conditions, which we have secured solely to make our paper of more value to you.

The article "Agriculture and Its Proper Treatment," written by Dr. Donald McManis, will also be interesting to you. Read this week and we know you will appreciate the full special feature.

AZOTURIA AND ITS PROPER TREATMENT

By DR. DONALD MINTOSH,
University of Illinois.
Azoturia is a disease peculiar to the horse and is characterized by disturbance of the muscular system and the discharge of a milky urine. It is caused by a poisonous substance which enters the system through the food or water. The disease is most common in the summer months and is often fatal if not treated promptly.

The treatment of azoturia consists in the removal of the poisonous substance from the system. This is done by giving the horse a large quantity of water and a diet of soft food. The urine should be kept from becoming too concentrated.

It is important to note that azoturia is not a disease of the kidneys, but of the muscular system.
The kidneys are not affected in this disease.
The treatment should be directed at the muscular system.

The prognosis for azoturia is generally good if the disease is treated promptly. However, if the disease is neglected,
it may become fatal.

his friends thought him very clever.
Bridget quickly announced that the grocer must have forgotten to bring the nuts and raisins. The company was all more or less disappointed, but this omission, imperceptibly he said to the nuts and raisins should have been served.

Presenting to be very much amazed, he scrutinized his faithful vigilantly lifting the cap, much to the surprise of all, the disk was revealed full of nuts and raisins.
This is how Tom managed the trick.
He had gotten Bridget to see two kinds together all around the edge of space between the napkins made a nut and raisins. He held the bag behind his back, with another napkin over his head. While he was gesturing he had quietly changed napkins. The trick of hand, and all children's delight.

A GOOD IDEA.

Authorities of the city of Elgin yesterday requested every property owner to sprinkle sand or ashes over all walks which are covered with ice. This action follows scores of accidents which have occurred there in the last few days on the gray walks, in which one woman was killed and more than a dozen of people more or less seriously injured.

Conditions here are no better than in Elgin and the suggestions made by the Elgin city council could well be adopted by local people. The conditions of the walks can be blamed on nobody, but sand or ashes would prevent accidents.

Out of the Rain

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The wind came out of the northwest and howled around the lifeless station of Tilden Point. The rain fell in torrents beating like a dozen bass drums on the low roof or exulting against the window panes in rattling volleys of sound. Through the sheets of rain the sea was a gray blur and the sand was wet and sodden, but as the tide crept higher the booming of the surf grew louder and, mingled with the noise of wind and rain, almost drowned the voices of the men gathered about the table in the station.

Four of them were playing cribbage and another was reading near the gray window and several others lounged about the room. In the adjoining room the noise of wind and rain, almost drowned the voices of the men gathered about the table in the station.

gled expression of amusement, perplexity and doubt.

"You're the cap'n, Tom," said Henry Horn shortly. "We've got to do as you say and I hope you'll take your share of the bad luck that follows if you let that bird in here."

"I'll agree to take all the bad luck provided you'll let me have all the good luck that comes in with it," replied Tom Jolly, as he opened the window and admitted a warbling bird and immediately shut the sash again. The bird perched itself in the gloom of the corner where it had slipped and then lay there, a quiet, drowsy heap of feathers on a pile of newspapers.

The men gathered around the old table once more and Jerome Garret with certain dark looks toward the corner where the supposed bird of ill omen had fallen, turned his back on the bad luck and picked up his cards. "Where was we?" he demanded.

"It was my round," replied Peter Hanson, studying his cards nervously. "Well, fifteen—two fifteen—four—and the grand went on as it had before the interruption, to the accompaniment of drumming rain and howling wind."

Unnoticed by his neighbors, Tom Jolly went over to the corner and bent above the exhausted bird. Presently he returned with a small, motionless and turned to his companions.

"Boys," he said, "this isn't a sea gull—it's a carrier pigeon. He held the bird in his hands and they clustered around him while he lifted it, "tired wing and showed a small aluminum cylinder fastened to his back."

"Give the critter something to eat," suggested Jerome Garret, "replied that the stranger here no ill luck in his rain. "The firm needs picking up," he looked to the most obliging member of the corps and Henry Horn adopted the suggestion and after preparing some warm milk and bread for the bird.

After while, when the bird had recovered itself and would sit snugly in Tom Jolly's hand perched at the food, Henry Horn once more gathered up his scattered cards.

"Now that all superstition is laid at rest, Cap'n Tom," he said, "I'll place my message contained in that three cylinder belongs to you."

"That's right, it does, Cap'n Tom," replied the others in chorus and with an appreciative smile Tom removed the tiny roll of parchment from its envelope and read about the message it contained.

To the finder of this message which is born by Carrier Pigeon, Love-ly Lady, read from Sea Wall, N. J., October 1911. "Please, come home with owner and oblige."

"Sea Wall, New Jersey—that's not from where you're after, is it, Cap'n?" inquired Jerome Garret. "Not more than twenty miles away," returned Tom musingly. "You know I start down there tomorrow on my leave of absence and I believe I'll take the bird back to his owner."

"That's the best thing you can do and let it find his own way home," suggested Henry Horn.

"I would do that only it's rather a young bird and I think perhaps this is its first long flight. I'll risk taking it back to Mr. Sprague," said Tom with decision, and the matter was settled.

The next day dawned clear and crisp with no signs of the heavy storm and the frightened wind and wind-tossed clouds that had been still lower before their common enemy.

Tom Jolly started on his journey and when he reached Sea Wall it was as if he had stepped into a new world. The small, white, walled town of Robert Sprague, owner of the small shipyard.

"Well, I'm mighty glad you brought her back to me, Mr. Jolly," said Mr. Sprague heartily. "Lovely Lady is a young bird and this is her first flight as you have surmised. She is the particular pet of my daughter, Mary, and it was against Mary's wishes that I sent the bird out Tuesday in the face of the threatening gale. To tell the truth, I heartily desired to hope she would go very far. I've taken her to different cities and allowed her to fly home but this is the first message she has carried forth."

Tom Jolly was interested in the companions of Lovely Lady and after Mr. Sprague had shown him all the other carrier pigeons he took him up to his pretty cottage where the life never had an opportunity of meeting Mary Sprague, fair and sweet and over of demureness. She was delighted at the return of her pet and around the supper table that night Tom Jolly related the story of the storm and how Lovely Lady had tapped for admittance at the window of the station and of the thrill of superstition her tap had caused among the men.

"I hope Lovely Lady hasn't brought you bad luck, Captain Jolly," cried the shipbuilder when Tom had concluded his story.

Tom removed his eyes from Henry Sprague's lively face and said slowly and with a depth of feeling that he was understood:

"If things come out the way I wish them to, Mr. Sprague, Lovely Lady will have brought me the best luck of my life."

Unusual Tonic.

Among the pretty customs introduced by a metropolitan household, a radio is called by her a "radio breakfast tonic," says the New York Sun.

Learning the table, morning each one of four persons found a tray covered with coffee on the breakfast table. Unrolled, another, and another paper was revealed, on which was neatly printed a recipe of Jerry's tonic. One of them read:

"No, I'm with you, away, even with the end of the world."

Unusual Tonic.

Among the pretty customs introduced in a metropolitan household, a visitor is called by her "morning breakfast tonic," says the New York Sun. Reaching the table, she morning with one of four persons found a tray unrolled paper cylinder on his own plate. "Goodness," another said, "another paper was revealed, on which was neatly printed a verse of Scripture. One of these reads: 'For I am with you, always, even unto the end of the world.'" returned to court, the final hearing thereon will be held on the twenty-ninth day of January, A. D. 1912, 10 o'clock A. M. or as soon thereafter as the business of the court will permit. Said assessment is payable in ten installments, and each of said installments shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, from and after the date of the first installment, based on account of work done on said improvement, until paid. All persons desiring may file objections in said Court before said day, and may appear on the hearing and make their defense.

Molly's Maneuver

By HARMONY WELLS

Molly's eyes roved restlessly over the well-populated beach. For the moment, she had lost sight of the good-looking man whose camera lay beside her on the sand. He had left it, for safety keeping, near a pillar under the pavilion while he took a long swim.

Molly had noticed him first because his bathing suit bore the name of the club in New York to which many of her friends belonged. She had attended many of the little private dances given by the Kanawa club. The rest of the time she had watched him out of pure fascination.

He was coming up the beach, his bathing suit dripping, and Molly shifted her pink parasol so she had done on each occasion when his eyes had turned in her direction. He had not glimpsed the face beneath the sunshade.

The man in the bathing suit picked up his camera and Molly realized that the beach would be less attractive when he had gone. But he was not going. Molly watched him from her camera in a group of Kanawa boys. Suddenly Molly picked up her own camera and very quickly but very surely she snapped the picture of the man who was engrossed in his own camera.

"Let's have one more drive," she heard him call out to the boys.

He put his camera down in its accustomed place and tried to peer under the pink parasol. After the unsuccessful attempt he was down into the water.

The windmill that had been brooding in Molly's eyes now took definite shape in her imagination. The scene apparently to avoid the sun and seek down the water, the Kanawa camera. With a deft movement and shielding her hands with the parasol she examined the camera.

"Not yet," Molly admitted.

Danvers as he found his hand on a small one.

"This dance," he said quickly. "May I have it?"

The girl had not found her voice the first time he said that. There were three dances left. Danvers took them all and put down three extra.

Molly Keene only laughed heartily when she saw what he had done. "We are missing something we should not miss," Danvers suggested. Molly stood up and for the space of a second before he put his arm about her she looked into his eyes.

"Then," Danvers said, "be kind and brought her quickly near him.

When the strain of first meeting had worn off, Molly remarked, "I believe I saw you at Rye last summer."

"I have seen you for the last four weeks—every day," Danvers looked down into the original of the picture. It was far more lovely even than the picture. "Last summer my camera got mixed up with that of somebody else," he confessed. "The other fellow had taken many of many pretty girls. I selected one—and gave her the prize." Danvers laughed.

"For no reason at all Molly Keene blushed.

"I will show you the picture, after the dance—if you care to see it," Danvers told her.

"I have often wondered how they came out," Molly said and looked up into his eyes.

"Tell me what you know about mixed cameras?"

"I happen to be the mixer!" Molly blushed partly from the confession and partly because Danvers had lightened so closely about her. "I felt reasonably sure," she went on swiftly, "that we would meet—after I knew so many Kanawa boys."

"We were bound to meet," Danvers said.

One day a newcomer, in search of temporary lodgings, attracted by a conspicuous sign in the window of the first of these two houses, stepped to the front door to make inquiry.

"I see you have furnished rooms here?" he said to the portly man who answered his knock.

"Ta," replied the foreigner, pointing to the furnished room sign.

"Danvers da sign?"

"Wait. If you have one that's suitable I'd like to rent it for awhile."

"We no rent da rooms," was the stolid declaration. "I got my furniture in here, and dey take up all da houses."

"Don't you rent any rooms? Why, then, have you that sign stuck up in the window?"

"I'll tell you. Last week dat fellow next door hung such a sign in his front window, and when I see dat I put one of de same kind in my front window. Just to tell da people dat he star da only man in de place dat have his rooms furnished!"—Jude.

Women and Marriage.

It is said that every woman has some chance to marry. Representing her entire chance at certain points of her progress in time, it is found to be in the following ratio: Between the ages of 15 and 20, 14% per cent; 20 and 25, 24% per cent; 25 and 30, 34% per cent; 30 and 35, 44% per cent; 35 and 40, 54% per cent; 40 and 45, 64% per cent; 45 and 50, 74% per cent; 50 and 55, 84% per cent; 55 and 60, 94% per cent; 60 and 65, 104% per cent; 65 and 70, 114% per cent; 70 and 75, 124% per cent; 75 and 80, 134% per cent; 80 and 85, 144% per cent; 85 and 90, 154% per cent; 90 and 95, 164% per cent; 95 and 100, 174% per cent.

But This Is Different.

"Dan," said George, "you know how I feel toward you. Do you reciprocate?"

"George," Dan said, with a shy glance, "does this mean annexation?"

As he thought this out, not with a seconded, but slowly, deliberately, feeling the way to the mind, blindly feeling his way to a final conclusion, the boy had suddenly stepped upon the bed, overcame with light, and he was sitting on the floor, stepped over, and looked down over him in the dim light. He could recognize something of her features in the light, but he was not sure. There was no use seeking again; he would not; even had he been so bold he would not have talked freely with her. He was sitting in a more comfortable position, turned the lamp lower, went out, and latched the door. If his brother had assumed to be his brother, he would have been in the room with him this. If he could interview that girl now for only five minutes, he would be able probably to straighten out the whole thing. He was not sure where was she. Would she have remained until this time at Fort Larned with Kate Murphy?

CHAPTER XIX.

A Glimpse at Conspiracy.

Leaning against the inside of his own door, started by the rapid sequence of events, Keith was absolutely dumbfounded. He had unconsciously pictured most of what occurred in the next room. He heard Hill sink down into the convenience chair, and drink from the bottle, while the same man presently advanced toward the bed, where he stood looking down at his unconscious occupant.

"The fool is dead drunk," he discerned disgustedly. "We can't do anything with him tonight."

"I say—throw bucket water over him,"—hissed through the other genti-an's teeth.

"He knows my sister—Hope."

The gambler grasped the speaker, shaking him into some slight sense of blame of sobriety.

"Now, look here, Willoughby, I want the truth, and mean to have it," he stated. "Has some one been in here while Scott was gone?"

"Sure—didn't I just tell yer—friend of Home's?"

"Who was he? Speak up! I want the name!"

There was a faint gurgling sound as the gambler's vice-like fingers were at the boy's throat; a slight struggle, and then the choked voice gasped out:

"Let up damn yer! He called him self Jack Keith."

"I feel it a duty to tell you," says, "how much good Postum has done me. I am grateful, but also desire to let others who may be suffering from indigestion, know of the benefit by which I was relieved.

"I had suffered for 20 years from dyspepsia, and the acidity that usually accompanies that painful ailment, and which frequently prostrated me, had made me unable to eat meat, and even milk did not agree with me. Impaired digestion, so I used tea, exclusively, till about a year ago, when I found in a package of Grape-Nuts the little book, 'How to Live on Postum.'

"After careful reading of the booklet I was curious to try Postum as suggested for a package. I enjoyed it from the first, and at once gave up tea.

"Hardly worth while, Scott," he returned finally. "Perhaps a better way some understanding with Christy." "I'll try," said Scott. "But let's go on further. If we can once get her working with us, Wiloughby won't be much hand in the play—we shall need him. Thought I told you to keep sober?"

"Am 'sob'?" solemnly, "ain't he but six drinks; just natively trued out."

"I began to feel better very soon. My giddiness left me after the first few days; use of Portum, and my stomach became stronger so rapidly that I was not long till I was able (as I estimate) to take milk and many other articles of food of which I was formerly compelled to deny myself. I have proved the truth of your statement that Portum 'makes good, red blood.'"

"I have become very enthusiastic of the merits of my new table beverage and during the past few months, have conducted a Portum propaganda among my friends which has brought benefit to many, and I shall continue to do my friends of the 'better way' in which I rejoice."
