ORGAN REGITAL GOOD

The Organ Regital Given by Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Miller of Ravenswood Tuesday Evening Was Very Fine.

The recital given by Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Miller of Chicago at the Baptist church, Barrington, Tuesday evening was a musical delight and a pleasure to everyone present.

Our village is a very musical one and we hear a variety of instruments at our home talent concerts, but to many of us a pipe organ is a new interest and therefore its music is especially attractive.

Mrs. Miller is really a wonderful woman, being an organist of note, a singer, and of great personal charm; those who have heard organists in other places know that her playing compares favorably with that of the best organists, and as women organists are few, we are favored in Barrington, to have had her concert here. The lady studied in Cologne, Germany, in New York and Philadelphia with many teachers. She offered a program of ten selections, each one beautifully interpreted according to its theme and she has heard the whistled remarks of appreciation that were uttered during her numbers, she would have known that her efforts to please were not in vain. One of the notable features of Mrs. Miller's appearance is her graceful posture at the organ, she plays without exaggerated movements and gestures often characteristic of organists, especially when using several key boards of a large organ; this lady is familiar with the use of the extra key boards and prefers to play the larger organs, which is another test of her skill.

Dr. Miller, who is a well-known physician of Woodlawn, delighted the audience with each one of eight songs, and has so captured the musical senses of his listeners that they will be delighted to at sometime have the pleasure of hearing him again; he is of distinguished appearance and surprises one greatly with the soft, sweet tones of his bass voice, a quality not common to bass singers, their glory generally consisting of volume and not beauty of tone; the doctor sings soothingly, with sympathy for the nature of his song and seemingly with ease and a real pleasure in singing. Who would'st love to sing if one's singing was enjoyed by others, as is this genial gentleman's? He gave the Scotch ballads, especially "My Ain Folk," touchingly, and the gypsy song with the alternate gusto and pathos needed, while his rendition at the last of the Norris "Cradle Song" cast a spell over the congregation; a humorous encore showed the singer's versatility.

The concert was given for the benefit of the church and the musicians had given their services, a fact duly appreciated by the parish and all attendees. Dr. and Mrs. Miller are friends of years standing of Mr. and Mrs. William Cameron, through whose solicitation they were induced to come to Barrington. The church was arranged around the pulpit with nasturtiums and tiger lilies whose yellow shades blended in artistic effect. Reverends Lockhart, Thorne and Buehse of the local churches offered prayer and remarks of thanks.

An extra number and encore were sung by Miss Elvora Arps of Palestine, a local favorite, whose appearance, a program is always greeted with pleasure. Miss Arps has a powerful voice, which she controls agreeably to the softness of a lullaby and a love song and to the vigor of more strenuous selections. If the young lady whose professional concert work, as has been expected, it is believed that she will succeed and gain more than a local reputation as an excellent singer.

MRS. CELESTIA CLARK.

Former Resident of Barrington Died Suddenly Saturday Evening at Wauconda.

Mrs. Celestia Clark of Wauconda, wife of the late Matthew Clark, who died four years ago, died very suddenly last Saturday at her home in Wauconda.

Mrs. Clark, nee Pratt, was born in Stanford, Vermont, October 8, 1848 and was 63 years, 9 months and 8 days old at the time of her death. She was the oldest daughter of a family of four teen children and at an early age came to Illinois with her parents. She was united in marriage to Matthew Clark and three children came to bless their union. They are Merritt and Charles and Mrs. Charles Burton, all of Wauconda. Besides the children there are three sons and three brothers who are left to mourn her.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark occupied the Church farm, north of this village and will be remembered by many living here.

Saturday evening Mrs. Clark was sitting on the porch of her home visiting with relatives and seemed to be feeling as well as usual. She retired about ten o'clock and about 10:30 called her son Charles and complained of not feeling well. He at once tried to relieve her, but failing, called a physician. She expired at 11:50 o'clock p. m., despite all that could be done for her.

The funeral was held Tuesday morning at ten o'clock from the Baptist church at Wauconda. Rev. Howard officiating. Interment was in the Wauconda cemetery.

BASE BALL NOTES.

News About the Games Played by Barrington's Two Teams at Home and on Other Ground.

The game last Saturday between the Chicago Cubs and the locals resulted in an easy win for the latter. At no time did the visitors have a chance to win and after the fifth inning the locals made a joke of the game by letting anybody on the team pitch who cared to. In all five pitchers were used by the home team. The final score was 16 to 4.

Leslie Brown pitched Sunday for Oshkosh's Colts against the Metcalfs of Chicago and won his game 4 to 3 in ten innings.

Last Sunday the Wauconda team met defeat at the hands of the Lake Zurich Athletic club in a fine game by the score of 10 to 9. Three Barrington boys played with the Wauconda team. The game was witnessed by a number from here.

Butter Price Unchanged.

There was no change in the price of butter on the Elgin board of trade Monday, the market being declared firm at 25 cents. Fixing of the price followed a spirited fight between the Elgin and Chicago factions, in which the latter won by a vote of 21 to 20. The board failed to sustain the committee's report that the price be fixed at 25 cents firm.

A comparison of prices for the last four years follows:

July 8, 1912—25 cents.
July 17, 1911—24 cents.
July 18, 1910—26 cents.
July 19, 1909—26 cents.

The price fixed at Elgin on butter is for carload lots. Consumers should remember that the local dealer is compelled to pay about three cents in advance for his purchases.

The Chicago Telephone company is constructing a telephone line along the right of way of the new railroad east past Kropp's farm, also a line from Long Grove west past the Archer school house.

CHAUTAUQUA OPENED

Chautauqua Opened This Afternoon With Excellent Program—Will Continue Six Days July 18th to 23th.

Chautauqua meetings began in Barrington this afternoon for a week's duration. They are conducted on Lake street in a tent opposite the school and promise to be well worth attending.

A Chautauqua, as these summer open air lectures are called on account of their origin several decades ago in Chautauqua, New York, has been held in this village for a few years past and while they are well attended by many, did not always draw a certain element of our citizens on account of the divided feeling in this village on the subject of the Chautauqua. It would not be a good thing if it would drop that old feeling and go to these very good entertainments for their own amusement and instruction.

The previous meetings have been under the patronage of the state prohibitionist party and were known as the Lincoln Temperance Chautauqua, these coming meetings are given by a national organization, a stock company known as the Lincoln Chautauqua, which is conducting test entertainments in several states this summer.

Local men in charge are A. H. Meyer, general chairman; D. H. Richardson, secretary, and F. L. Waterman, treasurer. Special committees are advertising; A. W. Meyer, tickets; F. L. Waterman; grounds, lights and seats; H. F. Gleske; house talent and music; F. H. Plagge.

ODD FELLOWS' PICNIC.

Will be Held at Fox River Grove Next Thursday, July 25—Large Crowd Expected.

The Odd Fellows of this section will unite in an old fashioned picnic at Fox River Grove, Thursday, July 25. The affair is under the auspices of the Tri-City League, Cary, Palestine, Wauconda, and Barrington. Lodges from all parts of this jurisdiction will send delegates. See large bills for program. A large number of people from here and neighboring towns are planning to enjoy a day's outing at this beautiful grove.

Will Enlarge County Jail. At a meeting of the McHenry county board of supervisors held recently it was decided to expend $10,000 in improving the county jail at Woodstock. The present building will be enlarged and sixteen new cells installed on the main floor. The second floor will be used for the present prisoners and will also have a padded cell for insane patients. Toilet rooms, kitchen and other conveniences are to be provided.

Insert Eels Costs Leg. A Boston man lost his leg from the bite of an insect two years before. To have such a calamity from a snake and lose a leg would be a terrible fate. A snake bite, with a broken leg, would be a terrible fate. A snake bite, with a broken leg, would be a terrible fate.

Since July 1 a statement has been mailed to each subscriber of this paper indebted to us. We are greatly pleased with the promptness in which many have replied. There are a number, however, who have not responded as yet, but we hope to hear from all before July 30. The subscription price of this paper is $1.50 per year when paid in advance and $1.75 at the end of the year.

The postal authorities, under a new law which became effective July 1, 1912, requires us to pay an additional rate of postage on papers mailed to subscribers who are delinquent. The increased cost under this ruling will compel us to drop delinquent subscribers from the list, that is, any subscriber who is more than twelve months in arrears. If you are one of the delinquents please let us hear from you at once.

The date of expiration of your paper appears on the label of every paper mailed to you. No excuse for not knowing how your account stands. The list was corrected up to July 1.

Thanking all for past favors.

SOCIAL BIG SUCCESS.

The Annual Lawn Social Given by St. Paul's Church Drew a Big Crowd—Much Enjoyed by All.

The annual lawn social of the St. Paul's Evangelical church took place this week on Tuesday evening on the lawn between the pastor's residence and the church on east Main street, where Japanese lanterns and electric lights made the yard pretty and bright. This affair is always patronized by a crowd who come from all denominations and factions in the town and has always been known as the best attended entertainment of the whole year.

The high school band helped to draw a crowd and the boys were very generous in the number of their selections. The band very in its organization and persons, but this time always has a band to make things lively at law socials. Few small towns are "owners" of a band and especially such good ones as we have had in the last decade of years.

Rev. Wilking has developed this parish splendidly in the few years of his pastorate here and seems to be a general favorite among his people. Tuesday night showed that he is well liked by the men of his congregation and that is the test of a minister's popularity.

Will Gottschalk and Will Reed were the general cashiers of the evening; the confectionery and cigar stand was in charge of Miss Lizzie Gilly and Arthur Martin; the ice cream tables were conducted by Misses Alma and Laura Gilly, Anna Witt and Dan Gilly, Will Jahnke and Ernest Rieke. Twenty-two gallons of ice cream were sold.

The profits of the social were not so

Vote of 55 to 28 Declares
Bribery Was Used.

RESOLUTION THAT OUSTED LORIMER FROM SENATE.

The Lea resolution, adopted by a vote of 55 to 28, was as follows: "Resolved, That corrupt practices and practices were employed in the election of William Lorimer to the senate of the United States from the state of Illinois, and that his election therefore was invalid."

Washington, July 15.—The senate of the United States struck William Lorimer of Illinois from its membership Saturday. After two years and almost three months of the bitterest odds and practices were employed in fighting, by a vote of 55 to 28, it recorded a finding that "corrupt methods and practices were employed in the election of Lorimer and that his election was therefore invalid."

Cullom Against Colleague.
Senator Cullom, who was defeated for re-nomination in the April primaries in Illinois because of his vote for Lorimer a year ago, voted against him in the final test. He gave out a statement explaining he had become convinced that the election was attended by corruption.

Other senators who voted for him last year, but changed to the other side, were Briggs of New Jersey, Curtis of Kansas, Simmons of North Carolina and Watson of West Virginia.

Briggs and Curtis are Republicans, while Simmons and Watson are Democrats.

Jones Votes for Lorimer.
The only senator who voted against Lorimer last year and voted for him this time was Senator Jones of Washington, one of the five majority members of the investigating committee who reported in favor of the Illinois senator.

Eighteen of twenty-five senators who have taken the oath since the Lorimer vote was taken a year ago voted against Lorimer. Most of the new senators are progressives, who took the places of reactionary Republicans and Democrats.

Solemn Scene at Voting.
The voting of Senator Lorimer's right to retain his seat was a solemn proceeding in the chamber.

There was a deadly silence in the senate chamber while the roll was being called. When the announcement of the vote was made there was no sound of approval or disapproval. While the vote was being taken Mr. Lorimer sat in his seat in the back row on the Republican side of the chamber. His face was flushed and for the first time since he began the long fight he seemed to grow nervous. He appeared dejected and depressed. No one spoke to him while the roll call was in progress.

Lorimer Leaves Chamber.
When the announcement of the vote was made Mr. Lorimer, no longer a senator, arose slowly. He braced his shoulders, threw his head in the air, allowed a strange smile to come over his face and walked heavily toward the door. As he reached the door Senators Smoot, Crane and Bailey and Representative Rodenburg of Illinois shook him by the hand.

When Mr. Lorimer reached the outer floor of the chamber he found a crowd waiting to express sympathy. During his final speech Mr. Lorimer reiterated his intention to keep up the fight. Just how he will do this was not made clear, but it is inferred that he will continue to organize his friends throughout Illinois and endeavor to regain his political power. He has declared repeatedly during his speech that as long as his strength holds out he will devote himself to spreading what he terms the truth regarding his case throughout the nation.

Dixon Makes Denial.
After Mr. Lorimer sat down Senator Dixon of Montana, Roosevelt's campaign manager, arose to deny the charges contained in affidavits presented by Mr. Lorimer relative to alleged promises of money to Taft delegates if they would swing to Roosevelt.

Before the roll call was started Senator Tillman of South Carolina asked permission to explain his vote. He said he had no power to bind the clerk which was read. Senator Tillman voted for Lorimer last year and did so again in the final ballot. He is running for re-election in his state and has a serious opposition, but declared he would vote against Lorimer. Senator Tillman wept while portions of his statement were read.

Cullom May Get Vacancy.
Governor Deussen has the power to appoint Lorimer's successor, but in view of the fact that he is in the middle of a campaign it is possible he may allow the place to remain vacant until January, when the legislature convenes.

Discussion of the possibility of Senator Cullom's election to serve out Senator Lorimer's unexpired term has been revived as a result of the senator's vote against Lorimer. Senator Cullom's term will expire on March 4 next year. Lawrence Y. Sherman is slated to succeed him if at that time Senator Cullom should be named for the Lorimer vacancy, he would serve until March 4, 1914.

First Guessed for Bribery.

Mr. Lorimer is the first senator ever ousted because of corruption in a senatorial election. W. A. Clark of Montana returned from the senate to escape suspicion and afterward was re-elected. The elections of other senators have been investigated, but charges against them have not been established.

Roosevelt in His Extended Speech—
Says Letter Slandered Him.

Washington, July 15.—The senate by a vote of 55 to 23 adopted a modification of Senator Bailey's resolution declaring any attempt on the part of a president to influence the vote of any senator upon any question a violation of the spirit of the Constitution, after a discussion which lasted nearly the entire day Tuesday.

The resolution was prompted by President Taft's interference in the Lorimer case as shown by his letter to Theodore Roosevelt last January and revealed in a speech he made in Boston last April.

Senator Bailey made this letter the basis of a scathing denunciation of the president for interfering with the constitutional rights of the senate and characterized the president's reference to him as a "false and infamous slander."

Senator Borah defended the president as did Senator Smith of Michigan and several others. When Senator Bailey arose to speak to his resolution instantly the senate seals began to fill. He was fairly started when Senator William E. Borah of Idaho challenged his allegations that President Taft had not been able to read the evidence before he wrote the famous letter of January 8, 1911, to Roosevelt. Senator Borah was mentioned in the letter as the president's advisor.

Bailey insisted and sustained his point that the president had not read the evidence. Lorimer in his speech made the same charge based on the fact that the report did not reach the document rooms until the day after the letter was written.

"I want to show just how officious and meddlesome the president was in this matter," Bailey declared, as he had the clerk read the letter. "He hardly uses the term now, I guess," commented Bailey, evoking a titter as the salutation, "My Dear Theodore," was read.

He took up the letter and analyzed it. "In God's name, has the senate of the United States reached such unspeakable degradation," he cried, "that the president must summon senators to the White House to urge them to discharge their duty under their oath of office?" at the part where President Taft said he had "summoned senators to the White House to urge them to be honest."

"He sowed the seeds here which culminated in Chicago in splitting a great party," he said. "The president may find it necessary to give out the other letters to which he refers as the campaign progresses and the former president asks them."

He said as much right to summon a member of the Supreme court and tell him how to decide a lawsuit as he has to summon a senator and tell him how to decide the future of another senator. He has more right, for the judges are creatures of his hand.

"When the president of the United States declared I intended to keep the senator from Illinois in his seat regardless of the law and the evidence, he penned a false and malicious slander against me," said Bailey.

Even if the president had a right to use his power to remove his seat, Senator Bailey charged he acted erroneously because in the letter of January 6, 1911, Mr. Taft wrote he had only read "some of the evidence as he could get at."

"It is fair to try a man on his good name—of what is dearer than his name on such evidence as I could get at," he demanded of the speaker. The Texas senator suggested that he had been singled out because Colonel Roosevelt entertained an "ancient prejudice" against him.

"I once proved that he slandered me," added Senator Bailey, "and when I denounced him, as I now intend to denounce the present president, the country held up its hands in horror. Those held them higher than the present president, but I have lived long enough to see him ransack the records of the war department to convict Colonel Roosevelt of a falsehood and to seem to have a success. When the president penned that infamous slander of me in this letter no one knew it better than the president of the United States himself."

UNWARRANTED CRITICISM

A woman of this village spoke very sarcastically to one of the reporters of this paper this week saying, "Well, the REVIEW had something wrong again," with emphasis on the "again." If she could only realize the amount of time spent in trying to get news items absolutely verified before publishing, she would perhaps temper her criticisms. Mistakes will happen and we regret them and are always willing to correct anything that is not true, however people's remarks are rather free about occurrences and it is hard to judge what is fact and what is gossip. What a time there would be if we took everyone's words for truth and inserted just what is said on the streets for facts. We want all the items we can get and appreciate help in gathering them, but we want them true and honest, in good faith, without malice and without scandal. The woman said "I suppose you just guess at it," which is not so, it is unkind and undeserved.

CHICKEN IS CHICKEN.

Chickens which are allowed to run at large in this village are a nuisance. It does not matter whether they are of the spring variety or older they are still a nuisance. The village ordinance says: "It is hereby declared to be a nuisance for any person within the limits of the Village of Barrington to allow chickens and poultry to run at large within the limits of this village." A fine of not less than five dollars and not exceeding two hundred dollars is provided for violation of the ordinance. You will please your neighbor by keeping your chickens within your own yard.

ALFALFA KILLS CANADA THISTLES.

Where alfalfa will grow the farmer need not worry about Canada thistles. Plow up the ground and sow it to alfalfa, and in a year or two there won't be a thistle left. Fred Hatch of McHenry county, cleared out a field in this way that was so bad with thistles as to be almost worthless. C. D. Wilcox of the same county has also had good success with this plan. The rank growth of the alfalfa, together with the frequent cutting, is too much for the thistles.

ADMIT SEWERS ARE NEEDED.

Residents of the east end of Russell street have complained to Dr. W. A. Shearer, health officer, as to the filthy condition of the open ditch in that street. The heavy rain Saturday did much to improve conditions but will give only temporary relief. No doubt the residents of that district will agree that a sanitary sewer system is needed on their street.

MUZZLE THE DOG.

It appears that the order issued to muzzle dogs, as required by ordinance, is not being given the attention that it should have. No doubt after a few of the unmuzzled dogs are put out of existence the owners will regret that they did not pay attention. Several cities in this part of the state have recently had experience with mad dogs. Let us not be negligent in this matter.

Some of the Entertainers Who Will Appear Here

Hon. Charles H. Poole

One of the leaders of New Zealand Parliament has been secured for the Lincoln Circuit after an effort of five years. If there is any one man especially well qualified to lecture on the reforms which the American people are adopting year by year, it is Mr. Poole.

William Sterling Battis

Is known from coast to coast as America's foremost interpreter of Dickens. There isn't a man who knows Charles Dickens better than Mr. Battis, who talks, looks and acts the Dickensian characters.

Prof. E. L. Morgan

Of the Agricultural Department of the University of Wisconsin is the speaker for Farmers' day in each town. His lectures while of special interest to farmers, will prove a treat to both country and city people alike.

Bland's Band and Orchestra

In presenting Bland's Chautauqua Band and Orchestra we believe that we are giving our patrons the biggest musical treat ever appearing on our program. With ten accomplished musicians, five of them concert soloists, an extra fine brass quartet, string quartet and xylophone, the program can not fail to please even the most fastidious.

James R. Barkley

Mr. Barkley is a born artist. His crayon work includes everything from the humorous subjects to those which brings tears to the eyes of the audience. Many years experience in this work all over the United States has taught him what the people like to see most. The clay modeling is a novel feature of the program which no one should miss.

Mrs. Ancie Belle Battis

is an accomplished musician and a soloist of unusual ability.

Her selections will add charm to the program. Mrs. Battis will sing several songs while Mr. Barkley, the crayon artist, illustrates them in beautiful colors.

Dixie Male Quartet

This quartet is undoubtedly the strongest organization of its kind in the south. Thomas J. Kellam, the manager, is a cultured, highly educated Christian gentleman, a talented teacher and composer. He has a world wide reputation as a writer of sacred songs which have probably been used in nearly every church in the north.

Emma C. W. Matthews

is a charming entertainer both as a soloist and reader. She is a supervisor of music in the Chicago Public Schools and a teacher of elocution in a private school.

Prof. Louis Williams

will give a lecture on the "Wonders of Electricity."

SYNOPSIS:
The story opens on Long Island, near New York city, where Miss Emily French, manufacturer of the celebrated "Mercury" automobile, lives her way. The day has stopped and her cousin, Dick French, is out maddled with drink to direct it again. They meet another car which is run by a professional driver named Lestrange. The latter tells the French car and directs Miss French how to proceed. Lestrange has disappeared his son, who has disappeared. Emily informs Emily that he would like to have her marry Dick, who is a good-natured but irresponsible fellow. It appears that a partner of Emily's, who was an expert to race with the "Mercury" at auto events, has crashed Lestrange, and at the French factory Emily encounters the young man. They are introduced to their meeting when Dick comes along and recognizes the young man. Dick tells the way Lestrange ignores their first meeting when he was in the race, and in making a race track, and an accident. Lestrange meets Emily in the month of the race. Under an impulse he cannot control he kisses her and she returns his love.

"I thought there was to be no more trouble," she faltered, distressed. Lestrange looked down at her steadily, his gray eyes darkening to an expression she had never seen before. "Have I no right?" was his question. "Is there no cancelling of a claim, is there no subsequent freedom? Is it all no use, Emily?"

Vaguely awed and frightened, her fingers tightened on his arm in a panic of surrender.

"I will come to you, I will come to you," he said, his eyes fixed on her. "You know best what is right—I trust you to tell me. Forgive me, dear, I wanted to."

He silenced her, all the light flashing back to his face.

"A promise! hush! Oh, I shall win tonight with that singing in my ears. I have more to say to you, but not now. I must see Bailey, somehow, before I go."

"He is at the house; let me send him here to you."

"If you come back with him."

They laughed together.

"I will—Do you know," her color deepened rosy, "they call you 'Darling'! I have never heard your own name."

"My name is David," Lestrange said quietly, and kissed her for farewell. The earth dived under Emily's feet as she ran across the lawn, the sun glowed warm, the brook tinkled over the cascades in a merry madness of mirth. At the head of the veranda steps she tugged to look once more at the roof of the white pavilion among the locust trees.

"Uncle will tell me when he knows you," she laughed in her heart. "Any one must like you."

The servant she met in the hall said that Mr. Bailey had gone out, and that Mr. French, also, and separately, the former having taken the short route across toward the factory. That way Emily went in pursuit, intending to overtake him with her pony car.

But upon reaching the stable, past which the path ran, she found Bailey himself engaged in an inspection of the limousine in company with the chauffeur.

"You'll have to look into her professional, Anderson," he was pronouncing when the young girl came beside him.

"Come, please," she urged breathlessly.

"Come!" repeated Bailey, wheeling, with his slow, benevolent smile. "Sure, Miss Emily, where?"

She shook her head, not replying until they were safely outside; then, to Mr. Lestrange, he is in the pavilion. He wants to see you."

"To Lestrange?" he almost shouted, baffling. Lestrange here?

"Yes. There is time, he says there is time. He is going back as soon as he can see you."

"But what is he doing here? What does he mean by taking his neck under any pretence?"

"He comes to see you," she whispered, and stood confounded.

"Good!" said Bailey, who reverently, after a moment of speechless stupefaction, "Yes, and him?"

She turned, looking eyes to him, looking away.

"It is a secret, but I wanted you to know before you go back. Dick said he was coming to see you."

"Yes, was the secret same, he is coming."

He kissed her once, then she drew back and he went down the terrace toward the gates. As Emily sank down on the bench by the pavilion door, Bailey brushed past her, running after the straight line of his figure. "Send Dick—I understand, I will come."

like you. Say, shall I take you now, or send Dick for you after the race?" Mr. French exclaimed some inarticulate words, but neither heard him. "Send Dick," Emily answered, her eyes on the gray eyes above her. "Send Dick—I understand, I will come."

the park, carrying his hat in his hand. A short distance from the pavilion Emily stopped abruptly, turning a startled face to her companion.

"Some one is there," she said. "Some one is speaking. I forgot that Uncle Emerson had gone out."

She heard Bailey catch his breath oddly. Her own pulses began to beat with heavy irregularity, as a few steps farther brought the two opposite the open arcade. There they halted, frozen.

In the place Emily had left, where all her female toys still lay, Mr. French was seated as one exhausted by the force of overmastering emotion; his hands clenched on the arms of the chair, his face drawn with passion. Opposite him stood Lestrange, colorless and still as Emily had never conceived him, listening in absolute silence to the bitter address pouring from the other's lips with a low-toned violence indescribable.

"I told you, then, never again to come here," first fell upon Emily's conscious head, "I supposed you were at least French enough to take a dismissal. What do you want here, money? I warned you to live upon the allowance sent every month to your bankers, for I would pay no more even to escape the intolerable disgrace of your presence here. Did you imagine that I would accept of an accept even you as a successor? Wrong; you are not missed. My nephew Richard takes your place, and in it, I suppose you, to Europe and your four-born with; there is no lack in my household."

The voice broke in an excess of savage triumph, and Lestrange took the pause without movement or gesture. "I am going, sir, and I shall never come back," he answered, never more quietly. "I can take a dismissal, yes, if I have wished once or hoped for an accord that never existed between us. I go cured of such folly. But hear this much, since I am arrested at your bar, I have never yet disgraced your name or mine unless by the boy's mischief which sent me from college. The money you speak of I have never seen; I have never seen it. He beat me, and in the empty moment there came across the mile of June air the roaring noise of his car, and he toward the call, but as instantly recovered himself from the self-betrayal. There is another matter to be arranged, but there is no time now. Nor even in concluding it will I ever come here again, sir."

There was that in his bearing, in the dignified carelessness of courtesy with which he saluted the other before turning to go, that checked even Emily French. But as Lestrange crossed the threshold of the little building, Emily ran from the thicket to meet him, her eyes a dark splendor in her white face, her hands outstretched.

"Not like this!" she panted. "Not without seeing me! Oh, I might have guessed!"

His vivid color and animation returned as he caught her in his headless of weakness.

"You dear! My dear, my dear, not even a question? There is no one here but us."

"If you come back with him."

They laughed together.

"I will—Do you know," her color deepened rosy, "they call you 'Darling'! I have never heard your own name."

"My name is David," Lestrange said quietly, and kissed her for farewell. "It is a secret, but I wanted you to know before you go back. Dick said he was coming to see you."

"Yes, was the secret same, he is coming."

"I think that things are kind of mixed up here, Mr. French," he stated grimly. "I guess I'm the one to straighten them out a bit. Two love a bit. Mr. David from the time he was a kid and never saw him get a square deal yet. You asked him what he was doing here—I'll tell you; he is Lestrange."

There is a degree of amazement which precludes speech; Mr. French looked back at his partner, mute.

"He is Lestrange. He never meant you to know; he'd have left without your ever knowing, but for Miss Emily. I guess I don't need to remind you of what he's done; if it hadn't been for him we might have closed our doors some day. He understands the business as none of us back-number, old-fashioned ones do; he took hold and shook some life into it. We can make cars, but he can make people buy them. Advertising! Why, that's the foot picture he drew on your back of a pad, one day, of a row of thermometers up to one hundred forty, with the sign 'Mercuries are at the top'—that's his month's notice."

Bailey cleared his throat. "He was always making people notice, and laughing while he did it. He's risked his neck on every course going, to show our cars in the best light. HOW THE HOUSEKEEPER CAN SELECT FRESH, SOUND AND SWEET CUTS OF MEAT

The essentials of choice meat are evident in this prime rib roast. Note the full, well-defined shape, the thickness of flesh, even covering of fat, small amount of bone, abundant marbling and firm condition. There are other cuts that are cheaper, some of which are just as nutritious, but none higher in quality.

By L. D. HALL, University of Illinois.

To satisfy the average person, a steak, chop or roast must be palatable, nutritious and not too expensive. To most people, however, the obtaining of meat having those qualities seems to be largely a matter of luck. Although it is customary to blame bad luck to the butcher, much of it easily can be eliminated by learning the characteristics that go to make up palatability, nutritive value and economy in the different cuts.

Fresh, sound, sweet meat is, of course, the only kind to be considered. Such meat is almost odorless, but has a slight, fleshy smell that is pleasant to the olfactory nerves of a normal person. A strong, stale, or tainted condition may usually be told by natural instinct.

Tenderness is the first requisite in the minds of most meat market patrons; so much so, that other essentials of good meat are usually sacrificed to secure it. For instance, meat in constant demand, even at high prices, because of its tender nature, whereas mature beef is much more nutritious. As a factor, meat which is light and less weight in cooking, and, furthermore, if properly cooked, may be made practically as tender. The important tenderness is the connective tissue (the white, membranous substance between and about the fibers and muscles of meat), which changes to soft consistency that the flesh may be penetrated with the finger or easily cut with a knife. Usually, too, meat that is well marbled or specked with fat is of the tender kind.

Flavor is a factor that varies in about inverse ratio to the natural tenderness of meat. Those who appreciate the richness of meat, and aside from artificial relishes supplied by the cook, prefer mature beef to veal, select shoulder of lamb in preference to the saddle, and choose a choice roast steak rather than tenderloin. The nearer the bone the sweeter the meat, and all are familiar with the fact that meat from a shank soup bone has a higher flavor than loin steak. But, like tenderness, this is a matter that lies largely at the mercy of the cook.

Proper color and attractive appearance are other points that make meat palatable. Good beef, when first cut, is a rich, red color, which changes to a pale or bright cherry when exposed to the air a short time. Veal varies from almost white to light red, and at its best is a pink. Mutton is dull brick red, and lamb cuts range from whitish to a grayish pink. Pork varies from nearly white in young pigs to a rich red or rose shade in older and male. The fat of all meat should be

HOW TO PASTEURIZE MILK IN THE HOME

By PROF. B. R. RICKARDS and H. M. PARKER, University of Illinois.

All milk intended for babies should be pasteurized in the home. An ordinary double boiler that can be obtained at any hardware shop at small cost furnishes a sound method of pasteurizing milk without the use of expensive apparatus. Proceed as follows:

1. Fill both parts of the double boiler with water. The depth of the water reaches 150 degrees Fahrenheit, which is the temperature at which the milk should be heated. The tops of the bottles should be tightly stoppered with clean non-absorbent cotton.
2. Place a dairy thermometer in the water. When the temperature of the water reaches 150 degrees Fahrenheit, remove the double boiler to the rear of the stove and allow it to stand covered for 30 to 40 minutes.
3. The milk must then be chilled quickly. Set the bottles in a large tub of water, and pour the milk into the water. Shake bottles and test by quickly chilling by holding the side of the bottles under the running water.

If very early efforts are desired, plants should be covered with glass, but for ordinary purposes the seeds are sown directly in their permanent place. The common horticultural varieties may be raised in two groups, the dwarf bedding varieties and the tall or climbing kinds. The dwarf varieties are very compact and form a neat dense bush, which are fairly hidden by bright blossoms. All shades of red and yellow may be obtained. The climbing varieties are numerous climbers for verandas and are useful for covering unsightly fences, banks and walls or to trail over rough, ugly ground.

PROFITABLE MANAGEMENT OF SMALL FLOCK OF GRADE EWES

One of Dozen of Animals Will Live and Grow Fat Where Cow Would Starve to Death—Also to Have Lambs Come in January or February, the Earlier the Better.

Sheep on a Western Ranch.

(By R. B. RUSHING.) Four years ago I purchased a piece of land adjoining my farm which was, to say the least, one of the worst run-down pieces of land in the country, with noxious weeds of all kinds, the burdock being very rank.

I turned in my sheep and in a few weeks they had the burdock eaten right into the ground.

The sheep, while it is one of the easiest of animals, will live and grow fat where a cow would starve to death. I usually make two cullings of my flock each year; one in the spring and one in the fall.

In the spring I cull out all the ewes that do not bring lambs or those that do bring them and for some cause fail to raise them, unless those ewes are of extra quality and promise well in the future.

In the fall I cull out and ship off all the old and weak ones, also fatten and ship the wether lambs during the fall and winter, thus my spring culling is light and my fall culling heavy.

However, I consider both important. I make a point to always buy the best registered rams I can find. There is nothing gained in using a "cheap ram" on a flock of grade ewes.

If you want to raise early lambs, that is, winter lambs, you must be thoroughly prepared and clearly understand the business. It means sleepless nights, burning bottles and warm blankets. But lambs usually bring a good price in the market, which I think pays for the trouble of raising them.

I aim to have my early lambs come in January and the first of February—the earlier the better. My ewes are kept in good, dry condition, both before lambing and after.

Here is where many fail to have what is called "good luck" with sheep, so many flocks after they bring their lambs, either early or late, turned out in the early spring and that is all that is thought necessary. Consequently they become thin in flesh and run down from sucking.

Thus, when the breeding season comes again, they are in no shape for service, and if they do get with lamb at all, the chances are they will bring a weak lamb. "Bad luck" follows of course.

You can plainly see that the real trouble lies in their care and handling at all times. They must be made to take plenty of exercise and not be housed until just before lambing time, except in stormy weather, then it is well to have a shed provided for them to go under during the summer storms.

When lambing time comes I watch my ewes very closely and am obliged to be with them both day and night almost continually. Of course at this time I keep them in a good, warm barn.

I fence off little pens about six feet square and put a ewe and her lamb in by themselves for two or three days until the lambs have become strong enough and sufficiently acquainted with their mother to know her and find her when turned in with a number of ewes and lambs in a large place provided for them in the barn.

Of course talking about winter lambs may seem a little out of season now, but now is the proper time to be thinking of the very thing for it will not be many months before the breeding season will be here and then if the flock is not in proper condition for breeding, the winter lamb business will prove a failure.

It is an excellent plan for every farmer to put up every fall a quantity of oats straw to help out in carrying the sheep through the winter. When straw will answer the purpose but it is not as good as oats straw.

Of course straw is not an ideal feed for sheep. It contains little nutriment, but not much and a great deal of food fiber, but clean oat straw fed sparingly in connection with roots or other succulent feed helps out wonderfully.

Placed in the rack with clover hay it will be pretty well eaten up every day and it undoubtedly saves some grain.

GOOD SUBSTITUTE FOR MEAT

Will Be Appreciated, as a Change, by Those Who Are Not Strict Vegetarians.

This dish calls for two cups of thoroughly boiled cold barley, one cup of finely ground roasted peanuts, one cup of fine bread crumbs, one teaspoonful of salt and one saltspoonful of white pepper or paprika, one stick of celery, two tablespoonfuls of olive oil and three of butter, four tablespoonfuls of browned flour, one large onion, and vegetables stock or water. Make a brown sauce of the oil, onion and vegetables stock to thin to the consistency of thick cream sauce. Chop the onion fine and simmer it five minutes in a tablespoonful of butter, then stir in the barley, then the peanuts and bread crumbs mixed together with the salt, pepper, and celery. Add the hot brown sauce (left over gravy may be used for this). Mold into a loaf, mixing all ingredients well. Grease a roasting pan, place the loaf in it and cook in a hot oven ten minutes; then add a tablespoonful of butter melted in a cupful of hot water and baste with this every five minutes for one-half hour.

Remove to a hot platter and make a couple of brown gravy in the pan and serve in a sauceboat. If tomatoes are in season, garnish the platter with slices dipped in seasoned flour and fried in butter. Over all sprinkle the minced parsley.

Other cooked cereals or combinations of cereals may substitute the corn and rice mixture would be good.

DESSERT DISHES OF RHUBARB

Pudding, Tapioca, or Shortcake, Any One of Them Makes a Delicious Confection.

Rhubarb Pudding—Mash half a pound of bag or pulled figs, or use one cup of raisins or mixture of all or two of these fruits. Cover with boiling water and cook until water is nearly absorbed. Cut a pound of rhubarb in inch pieces, put a layer of the cooked dried fruit, and repeat until all is used. Add a quarter of a cup of hot water and bake in a slow oven until the rhubarb is soft. Serve cold alone or with cream.

Rhubarb Tapioca—Soak half a cup of tapioca over night and cook until clear in a double boiler. Place in a buttered pudding dish two cups of rhubarb, cut in small pieces, one cup of sugar and a pinch of ginger. Pour the hot tapioca over this, stir in one teaspoonful of butter, cover and bake one hour. Put a marriage on it before serving. If you like, or serve it cold, with plain or whipped cream.

Rhubarb Shortcake—Put two cups of rhubarb, cut small, with a scant cup of sugar in a double boiler and cook until rhubarb is tender and sugar dissolved. Add the juice and chopped rind of one lemon. Make a shortcake by your favorite recipe, but cut and bake it like biscuit. When done, break open, butter them and arrange on a hot dish. Put the rhubarb in between and when serving pour the juice over them.

Successful Jelly Making. Use good fruit which is a little under ripe. Use the best granulated sugar. No not make large quantities of jelly at one cooking.

Heat the sugar in the oven before adding it to the fruit juice. If the juice must be boiled down, always do so before the sugar is added.

The jelly will be clearer and finer if the fruit is simmered gently and not stirred during cooking. Do not allow the syrup to boil rapidly or crystals may appear in jelly. Always make jelly on a bright clear day.

Wash the jelly glasses in hot water and then in a folded cloth wrung out of water. Set the jelly in a sunny window for twenty-four hours, then cover with melted paraffin and set in a dry, cool place.—Woman's World.

Antiseptic Soap. Five pounds rendered fat; one can concentrated lye; three pints cold water; one heaping teaspoonful pulverized borax; one cup of ammonia; two ounces glycerine; two teaspoons carbolic acid. Pour can potash into the water and let stand till dissolved, stir occasionally. Add ammonia and borax. Melt fat and add, then stir in a creamy consistency, then put in glycerine and acid. Pour into jars of paraffin. Turn soap into granite pan to harden. Mark off while soft. Follow directions carefully.—Home Department, National Magazine.

Stewed Beetroot. Bake the beetroot one hour, when cold take off the skin, cut it into slices a quarter of an inch thick, put it into a stewpan with half a pint of any stock, a saltspoon of salt, the same of pepper, one-half a grain of cayenne, and a pinch of thyme. Two portions of parsnip chopped; simmer three-quarters of an hour, add a wineglass of vinegar and serve.

Shrinking Cottons. As cotton materials shrink they must either be shrunk in the place or made a size larger and luck trusted that the garment may not shrink below its wearing in the clothes.

Shrink cottons by boiling them in water until it is thoroughly saturated and then wring out and dry; sprinkle and iron on the wrong side with a hot iron and the shrinkage is removed.

DESTRUCTION OF OLD FRUIT TREES

Traveling Timber Buyers Buy Them Up for Manufacture of Tool Handles—They Should be Spared.

(By J. H. HAYNES.) There attention to be a disposition on the part of the farmers to ostracize the old standbys of years ago. It seems like a sacrifice to do so.

Some traveling timber buyers want over our country buying old apple trees for the manufacture of tool handles. Their story was that the trees were worthless for fruiting and the price they paid would replace the old trees with young stock.

The grandfather of the writer planted an orchard (seedlings) 60 years ago. He gave his children the privilege of choosing a tree and naming it.

One of the boys called his tree "Bill's Apple." This tree still brings and bearing. So is the boy who named it.

One other of these seedlings that was two-grained wool the Pound Pie was still bearing. Enough wood was taken from these two old trees to make a gavel to be used by the presiding officer at the annual meeting of the descendants of the old planter.

Last August over 300 of these children and grandchildren met to commemorate the memory of the planter of these two old trees and this gavel was presented to the society.

Some four or five miles from where these trees stand is a pear orchard all seedling varieties at the same time by another planter named Barker. These trees are in fair condition yet, and although seedlings, the fruit is good. Our motto is spare the old and spare the young.

Grave Cutting. Plant grape cuttings in the spring as early as the ground can be worked.

FORAGE-PLANT SEEDS IMPORTED

Considerable Number of Lots Examined Found of Low Vitality and Inferior Quality.

The Secretary of Agriculture is calling attention to the Seed Laboratory which has examined a considerable number of lots of forage-plant seeds imported into the United States during 1911 and found that many of them consisted of seed of low vitality and high weed-seed content, said:

"The analyses of 18 seed lots of seed of alfalfa clover, red clover, white clover, and hairy vetch, amounting to 225,000 pounds, showed that the pure seed consisted of only 44.8, 64.2, 51.2, and 23 per cent, respectively, of the seedlings, while the germination was as follows: 32.4, 37.0, 30.5, and 71 per cent, respectively. Consequently, though this seed was imported at a cost of $7.47, $7.97, $17 and $23.81 per 100 pounds, respectively, the actual cost of 100 pounds of seed that germinated was $44.85 for alfalfa clover, $34.84 for red clover, $111.85 for white clover, and $23.81 for hairy vetch. From two to four times the market price of seed of the very best quality."

"A special examination of seed of alfalfa clover and red clover imported from Canada during 1911 showed that approximately one-half was unusable for seedling purposes in that country, the seed control act there prohibiting sale of seed when this is prohibited by a number of noxious seeds are found to the pound. One lot of seed of alfalfa contained less than 50 per cent of pure seed, germinating only 18 per cent, or 74 per cent of the entire bulk. This particular lot contained approximately 125,000 weed seeds in each pound."

Her Opera Ticket

By Rosalie G. Mendel.

"Irma just telephoned inviting me to the opera next Saturday afternoon. Isn't it too darling of her?" said Marjory to her sister.

"It certainly is," answered Mrs. Morse, "especially as it is quite unusual for Irma to ask any one anywhere."

"Her cousin couldn't go because her child has the mumps, so I am to use her ticket," explained Marjory. "But you are going Saturday night with Bob; won't two sessions in one day be too much for you?" asked her sister.

"One can't afford to forego an opera invitation. They are too rare for that. And besides I had promised to treat myself on the following Saturday to that particular performance. Now, since through Irma's generosity I have saved the price of my ticket, I can afford to invest in one of those gold lace caps that for months I have been longing to possess. I think I'll run down and buy it now."

"Are you just two girls going?" asked Mrs. Morse.

"Oh, no. Irma has a guest. After accepting Irma's opera invitation, I felt it incumbent on me to reciprocate. So I asked them both to luncheon next Wednesday. It will have to be an elaborate affair, I fear, because this visiting girl is accustomed to being royally entertained."

Late the following Wednesday afternoon Marjory burst into her sister's house exclaiming, "Well, I do declare! I never heard of such a thing!"

"What is the trouble, dear? You look quite upset. Wasn't the luncheon a success?"

"Success? I should think it was. And no wonder, for the time, trouble and expense it cost. That is what makes me so provoked."

"I don't understand. Please explain," said Mrs. Morse.

"Well, you know that Irma asked me for the opera. I began Marjory. Then, in order to reciprocate, I gave an elaborate luncheon for her and her sister, Isalpid guest. You are aware that I invested in a gold lace theater cap on the strength of the money I saved in not being obliged to purchase my own ticket. It is no news to you that I didn't enjoy my Saturday evening with Bob because I was exhausted from the afternoon's performance. You know all that, don't you?"

"I certainly do, but I fail to see any connection between that and your apparently righteous indignation."

"Then, later, Irma didn't invite me to the opera at all. When she was leaving our house this afternoon she said: 'What are you going to do tomorrow, Marjory?'"

"I replied: 'I am going on a Christmas shopping expedition.'"

"Oh," she exclaimed, 'Would you mind sending me a pair of long white glove gloves and a pair of short black ones? I simply can't get downtown tomorrow.'"

"Certainly, I acquiesced. 'I'll be glad to. Shall I charge them to your mother's account?'"

"No," she laughingly answered. 'You pay for them—you know you forgot all about giving me the money for cousin's opera ticket—so that will just about balance it. Of course, there's no hurry, but I thought I'd remind you.'"

"I was too surprised to do anything but stare as she and her guest thanked me profusely for the 'perfectly dear little luncheon.'"

"It surely is a huge joke on you," laughed Mrs. Morse.

And Marjory laughed too, saying: 'I guess it is! Next time I'll be more cautious in accepting opera invitations. It's a lesson to me.'"

Rat Disclosed Treasure.

The pursuit of a rat under the stones of a dam, near the intersection of two branch lines of a railway in Philadelphia, the other day, led to the discovery of hundreds of dollars' worth of silverware, hidden under loose stones. It is believed that the silver is a portion of the loot from several houses robbed in the city recently, which had been hidden in the dam until the burglar believed it safe to dispose of it. A man was strolling along near the dam early one morning when he saw a huge water rat cross his path. He picked up a stone to throw at it, but the rodent, on seeing him, stopped and looked at him. In an attempt to find the rat, the man began overturning the stones, when he saw a spot of red beneath one of them. He investigated further, and discovered that it was red cloth, wrapped around the silverware. When he unwrapped the cloth several dozens of knives, forks and spoons and a number of plates were disclosed.

Old Saw Reel.

Looking the stable door after the horse has been stolen is an old saying. A new version was given by a speaker at the annual meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute, who had noted the speculations on his way: "Boarding up the windows after the burglars have passed—London Chronicle."

Too Late Then.

"Come on home, Dick; don't you know when you're not enough?" "Georgia, I never knew anything when I've got enough."—L.A.

Well-Ordered Life. To do with as few things as we can, and, as far as we can, to see to it that these things are the work of freedom and not of slaves; these two seem to me to be the main duties to be fulfilled by those who wish to live at once free and refined, serviceable to others, and pleasant to themselves.—William Morris.

Test of Genius. Of course, it is unfortunate that a chemist in Paris should have doubled their price, but most of us don't worry nearly so much about that as about the unpromising prospect of success in our efforts to make the winter and the cool pile come out even.—Indianaapolis News.
