He obeyed. "See! There is no one here." He held open the door to the hall. "I must speak quickly. I am to leave this house in an hour. I may never see the hour."

"Ah, I can see by your face that you hate him! That is something. It is but little, I know, after all I have wished for—but it is something for me to treasure—something for me to take back with me to the poor, sad little people in this beauty world of men and women."

"You are the most incomprehensible."

"Am I not beautiful, Frederic? Tell me!" She came quite close to him.

"You are the most beautiful woman in the world, I know, but I do not like her."

"And I have wanted all my beauty—I have lent it to unloveliness and it has not been destroyed! It is still with me, is it not? I have not lost it—"

"You are beautiful—good—beyond anything I have ever imagined—but I could suddenly pass his hand over his brow."

"—why would he have loved me if it had not been for Lydia?"

"I couldn't have helped myself. I— I fear I—faltered in my—God, God, are you still trying to tempt me? Are you still asking me to go away with you?"

The hands crept out from the coat, way behind them—a crum of pain and anger that struck terror to their souls. They had not heard his approach.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Shot That Failed.

Tranquillity fell again, him taken to one side, left behind. At his back was the worthy Hindu, his eyes gleaming like coals of fire in the shadowy light.

"James!" fell tremulously from the lips of Yvonne. She swayed toward him an instant, then fell back again. Frederic said, "She had flung out something bright as it passed from the brown hand to the white one. He did not at once comprehend."

"It happened once," came hoarsely from the throat of James Brood. "It shall not happen again. Thank you, Ranjab."

Then Frederic knew! The Hindu had slipped a revolver into his master's hand!

"It gives me great pleasure, Yvonne, to relieve you of that damned, rotten, worthless thing that had you life!"

As he raised his arm, Frederic was forced with a start of horror. Scores, realising what he did, he buried Yvonne violently to one side.

It was all over in the twinkling of an eye. There was a flash, the crash of an explosion, a puff of smoke and the smell of burnt powder.

Frederic stood perfectly still for an instant, facing the soft clink that rose from the pistol. There was an expression of vague amazement in his face. Then his hand went uncertainly to his breast.

Already James Brood had seen the red blotch that spread with incredible swiftness of blood, red against the pink when the color had been. Chains with wide-open ends at the horrid spot, he stood there with the pistol still leveled in a perverted hand.

"Good, God, father! you've—why, you're—struggled from Frederic's writhing lips, and then his knees sagged; an instant later they gave way and he dropped heavily to the floor.

There was not a sound in the room. Suddenly, Brood made a movement quick and spasmodic. At the same instant Ranjab flung himself forward and grasped his master's arm. He had turned the revolver on himself.

The Hindu seized his hand, laid a grip of iron.

"Sahib! Sahib!" he hissed. "What would you do? Wrenching the weapon from the stiff, unresisting fingers, he hurried it across the room.

"My God!" groaned Brood. His tall body swayed forward, his eyes closed to cover his face. The Hindu caught him as he was sinking, firmly to his knees. "With a tremendous effort of the will, Brood succeeded in conquering the black—unconsciousness that was assailing him. He straightened up to his full height, and with tremulous fingers closed his eyes again.

"—Not bad, Sahib," he cried, and the words rang out. Yvonne removed her horrified gaze from the blot of red and fixed it upon the face of her husband. She straightened up slowly and her arms fell limply to her sides. "It was meant for me. Shoot, shoot, shoot, that's all, almost in a whisper."

The Hindu grasp tightened at the convulsive movement of his master's hands. His fingers were like steel bands.

"Shoot!" she repeated, raising both hands to save herself, for it was dead. I shall kill you with my own hands. This is your chance—shoot!"

Frederic's fingers relaxed their grip on the revolver. A fierce wild look took all the strength out of his body; he grew faint with it.

"God, he—he can't be dead! I have not killed him. He shall not die!" He sprang to his feet and uttered a yell, then dashed across the body of his son in his疯狂的 haste. The revolver, was caught in the nimble hand of the Hindu, who took two long swift strides toward the woman who now faced him instead of his husband. There was a great fight in his eyes as he saw her, and then he started, starting out upon her.

"But she did not quail. She was past all that. She looked straight into his eyes for an instant then, as if putting him out of her thoughts entirely. She turned slowly toward the two men on the floor. The man half raised the man, the woman half raised the woman.

"The man half raised the man, the woman half raised the woman. "Who—who are you?" he cried out in sudden terror. He felt the presence of Matilde. He could have stretched out his hand and touched her, so real, so vivid was the belief that she was actually there before him. "Matilde was here—I saw her, before God, I saw her. And—now it is you! She is still here, I can feel her hand touching mine—I can feel no, again."

The cold, lifeless voice of Yvonne was speaking to him, huskier than ever before.

"Matilde has been here. She has always been with him. She is always with me, too, James Brood."

"What are you saying?" he gasped.

She turned wearily away and pointed to the weapon on the table.

"Who is to use it, you or I?" He opened his mouth but uttered no sound, his eyes were fixed on the gun.

"You intended the bullet for me. It is not too late. Kill me, if you will. I give you the first chance—take it, if you do not want to touch mine."

"I cannot kill you—I cannot kill him. I have no right when you are smiling a moment ago. Matilde is here!"

"Hush!" said the woman. Brood's hands were shaking again, shaking and uncertain. "The doctor? He comes?"

"Even now," said the Hindu, turning toward the door.

It was Matilde! What accursed trick of— He sprang to his feet and uttered a yell, then dashed across the body of his son in his疯狂的 haste. For many seconds they stood with their faces close together, he staring wildly, she with a dull look of agony in her eyes, but unflinching. What he saw caused an icy chill to sweep through his tensed body, and a sickening of the stomach.

"Who—who are you?" he cried out in sudden terror. He felt the presence of Matilde. He could have stretched out his hand and touched her, so real, so vivid was the belief that she was actually there before him. "Matilde was here—I saw her, before God, I saw her. And—now it is you! She is still here, I can feel her hand touching mine—I can feel no, again."

He glanced at her, set, rigid face. "Yes, she was there, too. And she is between you and me. We will wait it out now. Now I see you as you are."

"Yes, God, God—I wonder—" His hand shook with a sudden spasm of indecision. He had again caught that baulking look in her dark eyes.

"Attend!" she cried, and he bent to the task again. He not-going to touch her, he had to touch her. "The door opened behind them and they looked up to see the breathless Hindu. He came straight to the woman.

"Matilde has been here. She has always been with him. She is always with me, too, James Brood."

"What are you saying?" he gasped.

She turned wearily away and pointed to the weapon on the table.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Voice of the Wind.

Hours afterward Brood sat alone in the room where the tragedy occurred. Much had transpired in the interim to make these hours long and weary, but still distinct years to him, each hour an epoch in which a vital and memorable incident had been added to his already overful measure of experience. Underneath all was an ever-present sense of insecurity, as if the hand of death were upon him, as if he were deprived of foundation or support. No matter where he looked, there was not the slightest ray of light in the darkness that enveloped his understanding. Something tremendous had happened, aside from the visible, physical incident, something that was almost empirically at the center of the tension, something that was beyond comprehension and intangible and which continually loomed up before him as a specter that had neither shape nor substance nor yet was it completely positive, as anything else that had happened. His mind was still in a state of shock, the outstretched figure of his unfeeling victim, was staring at the graying face with wide, unblinking eyes. He looked at it, laid upon the floor, and the thick wall of that prison room on the top floor. Some went at the rear of the house, an instant ago, was uttering a jumbled speech of prayer.

Many minutes passed. There was not a movement in the room. Brood, having loosed the outstretched figure of his unfeeling victim, was staring at the graying face with wide, unblinking eyes. He looked at it, laid upon the floor, and the thick wall of that prison room on the top floor. Some went at the rear of the house, an instant ago, was uttering a jumbled speech of prayer.

He looked at it, laid upon the floor, and the thick wall of that prison room on the top floor. Some went at the rear of the house, an instant ago, was uttering a jumbled speech of prayer.

"So! Ah, yes! I prayed and I have been answered. So! God in heaven, yes!"

He turned. Frederic's eyes were wide open. He was looking up at him, with a piteous appeal in their depths—an appeal for help, for life, for consciousness.

"It is not dead! Frederic, Frederic, my son—" He dropped to his knees and frantically clutched at the hand that lay stretched out beside the limp figure. The pale-striken eyes closed slowly. Frederic knelt beside Brood. He was a slim white hand to cut and touch the pallid brow.

"I shall save your soul, James Brood," a voice was saying, but it seemed far away. "He shall not die. Your poor writhing soul may rest at ease, for it is the death of the soul that now consumes him. But it is a soul hanging over him that his intelligence could not penetrate nor his physical being dispel, a matter how hard he struggled to clear a way to the open."

He had seen a vision. Its effect on him was like a blow to the forehead of a lifetime and had been shared in a single instant of contact with the influence that had at last made itself felt in physical manifestation after all these years of spiritual attendance. He had never been completely free from the vague notion that Matilde was more intelligent to the present that filled his dreams and denied him the gift of forgetfulness for a single instant of the hours when he was awake. He had never tried to banish her from his memory. He had failed to forget her, for she had been dead to him altogether, without cause, for obvious reasons, but the fact that she remained the dominant figure in his present despite the past was proof, even to him, that she was and always would be the controlling influence in his mind if not in his heart.

Slowly Frederic's eyes opened again. They wavered from one face to the other and there was in them the unsolvable mystery of divination. As the boy dropped once more, Brood's eyes were wide open, and the tension was released.

SHOULD COOL OFF GRADUALLY

Mistake to Turn the Hoses on Per spring Team, Is the Assertion of Veterinarian.

"In this hot weather there are always a number of fools who think they are kind to their horses when they turn a hose on them and drench them with cold water to thoroughly cool them off," said a veterinarian. He stopped a driver from throwing water on a team of horses because the horses were overheated, he continued, "the shock of such a bath in the region where the kidneys are situated is enough to kill him, and even if it does not appear harm, it will succumb much more readily to the heat afterward. After a horse has been drenched in this manner, it should be cooled off as gradually as possible. The first thing to do is to give a sponge and wash out its mouth. This removes the saliva, which is potassium, and refreshes the animal greatly, before it can be allowed to have a drink. After that, the horse should have a sponge bath, the hind ones as far as the haunches, the front ones to the chest. Then it is safe to wet its head, neck and the part of its back immediately behind the neck. Care should be taken, however, to keep the region of the kidneys perfectly dry. This habit of drenching horses in hot weather is giving horses and ponying a horse indiscriminately over their bodies is accountable for the death of many good horses every summer."

Sad Part of the Allegation. "Every hard fool in this town thinks he could run a team of horses after I do it!" complained the editor of the Terpentine Tocin and Guardian of the Hearthstone, the price whereof was a dollar a year and the time to subscribe now.

The Shame of the Cross

By REV. WM. WALLACE KETCHUM
Director of the Practical Work Course, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

TEXT—He endured the cross, despising the shame.—Heb. 12:2.

The cross, which Christ endured and the shame of which he despised, was not the idealized and sentimentalized cross of which we make much in our minds. It was a cross made of rough hewn sticks of timber, an in sartum or, like the gallows, upon which criminals were executed.

And yet, Christ, we are told, notwithstanding this despised its shame? What's the shame? That's the shame of belief, that it was death as a curse on man. But it was death, you see, that he had to bear. And as such he died in the eyes of the law; though he did nothing worthy of death, and Pilate his judge found in him no fault at all.

When we apprehend that Jesus Christ, the Holy One of God, suffered the reproach, the derision, the contempt, the contempt of the world, of common criminals, execution, we are told to know a little of the shame of the cross. We understand something of what Paul means when, speaking of Christ, he describes his death as being "condemned beyond death, he added, 'even the death of the cross'."

But there is a deeper shame than this which has spoken. It is the shame that came to him through dying; his death identified him with the result of sin, for death is a consequence of sin. Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for all have sinned. So, when he died, he died in the eyes of the world as the death of a common criminal. It was greater shame for him, the Son of God, in whom no sin, to die at all.

The teaching of the philosopher that death is natural to man, is not the teaching of the Bible. The body is not death, but the soul which escapes that which is death. The body and soul united constitute the complete man. This does not mean that when the dissolution of soul and body takes place, that soul does not survive the body. The Scriptures teach it does; but also teach that man's complete personal consciousness, the union of both soul and body, and that this will be realized at the resurrection of the just. Death is then not natural, but unnatural. It is the result of sin, and so for Christ to die was a disgrace, a reproach, a shame. Death had no dominion over Christ; death claimed up on him, but he claimed up on death. He said, speaking of his death, "taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." He alone of all men could say this. Other men die because they must, for "death has passed unto all men." But Christ died because he willed it, he yielded up his spirit; that is, he allowed death, the great conqueror of mankind, to overcome him. He suffered his shame.

But deep as this shame was, the shame of the cross was still deeper. It was the shame of our sin. For there on the cross, "Ho! bore our sin in his own body, there," "he who suffered for our sin, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God"; there, the holy spotless lamb of God "died for the ungodly." Thus, "the one who knew no sin, he who was identified, notwithstanding the result of sin by dealing with the result of sin for us." It has this power than anything else, that constituted the shame of the cross of our Lord. It's baseness and dishonor was your sin and mine, which he there put away by the sacrifice of himself!

Was it for this that I have done, he groaned upon the tree?

"I have sinned, unknown, and Love beyond degree!"

I wish we might catch the picture given us of our Lord in the two words "despised" and "endured." The first is the picture of the man who, in the shame of the cross that he, as it were, looked down upon it. Literally, the word means "to think down upon"; that is, to think lightly of it. What a wonderful Christ! Because of the joy set before him, he could think lightly of the awful shame of the cross. Truly, "the man who is set to be ministered unto, to be ministered unto, to give his life a ransom for many."

The other word, "endured," pictures him as voluntarily, patiently, suffering on the accursed cross. We see him here, not by the cruel nails that pierced his hands and feet, but his own will, able to bear and suppress love for us. Human hands placed him there, but divine love kept him there. Surely, his crucifixion from the human side was misery, for with wicked hands they slew him, but on the divine side it was sacrifice. God giving his son to be the savior of the world and the son giving himself that we might have life through him.

COOKED IN ITALIAN STYLE

Delicious Ways of Preparing Fruit That May Be a Novelty to Some Housewives.

For the many who prefer cooked to raw fruits the various delicious ways known to the Italians may be received with pleasure.

Different from the usual apple sauce in this method of cooking. Pare and quarter an apple, then slice it into a saucer; add to this six apples, add the juice of one orange, and a quarter of the peel sliced with the pulp, if not sufficient; juice a little water may be added and granulated sugar to taste. Cook only until the apples are tender, not long enough for them to lose form. When cooked the same way, it is delicious.

Apricots, fresh or dried, are cooked in the same way. If dried soak for eight or ten hours. Place in a baking pan, cover with sugar and maraschino wine, or in the oven, cook until soft and juicy, basting occasionally. Plums will be cooked equally good cooked as apricots.

Prunes, always seasonable, are wonderfully delicious when prepared in the true Italian way. Boil over high flames of any size if sufficient red wine to cover the fruit and for each pound of fruit add half a cup of granulated sugar, add a few drops of brandy and more wine if much juice is desired. Just what the wine does to the flavor of the prunes it is difficult to say, but certainly they are well worth trying. Dried cherries, as well as the fresh ones, are good cooked this way, and blackberries stewed with claret instead of water will prove a delicacy.

Peaches cooked with brandy are of course not a novelty, but peaches cooked with raspberry syrup instead of sugar and the usual brandy will be something to remember.

CHINTZ NEEDS GREAT CARE

Precautions Must Do Taken When There Is Need of Washing The Delicate Fabric.

The housewife whose home is filled with dainty chintz draperies and curtains is often troubled by the fact that each time her chintz is washed its lovely designs grow a bit lighter, until finally it fails to be almost indistinguishable.

The chintz should be washed in cold water with plenty of suds and vinegar. When the brine has thoroughly penetrated all through the cloth, a full hot water should be run into the tub; not enough to make the tub full of warm water, just enough to make it tepid. The washing should not be done with a very strong suds, in fact, a soft soap is preferable.

Of course the fading is all due to the way the chintz are laundered, and a little more care in that department will keep the bright colors practically the same new.

How to Clean Suede.

If you are wearing a pair of fashionable shoes it goes without saying that they have some suds somewhere in their makeup. To clean suede in their makeup, wash the suede tops or bottoms have suds made, or suds elsewhere there is some suds.

Also as a matter of fact, the suede becomes soiled rather easily. Now, there are several sorts of cleaners sold for suede and all of them are fairly good.

But a woman who has had much experience with cleaning suede says that the best way to clean suede is to rub it with a fineberry cloth. This cloth should be applied to the wrong side of the goods.

Of course the chintz will have to be fairly hot in order that the chintz may look fresh and without wrinkles, but this heat should be applied to the wrong side of the goods.

SCHOOLHOUSES SHOULD BE USED

TO BETTER ADVANTAGE.

Miss Ardella K. Tryon, a graduate last week of the Waukegan township high school in the class of 1915 gave as her Commencement essay up to date ideas on the use of the school buildings everywhere. Her article below is called an "honor paper" and has been published in other papers. Her advice is that being urged everywhere by teachers and other thinking people and would be especially adapted to Barrington because we have no adequate public halls for various affairs:

"Years ago when the women had to spin the cloth for their families, they naturally were interested in attending only to their special needs, and paid little attention to the needs of others. But now there is a sentiment of fellowship among the American people. Fellowship, or the serving of our fellowmen, is a part of our life. We have a desire that we can be useful by giving others the benefit of our experience and knowledge. But when, even the American people, united by this feeling of fellowship, meet to discuss their civic welfare and social development, to develop community interest?

"The opening of the public school buildings evenings will solve this problem. Twenty-five years ago, during one hundred and eighty days out of the year, the whole school property was used a scant seven hours daily—less than one-half of the total usable period. During the rest of the time it was absolutely idle. Taxes were paid on it, but the tax rates received only one-half of the full value of the property. In this day of progress everything which is an aid toward development should be utilized. The schoolhouses solve an economic problem. Why pay for hall and auditoriums in which we have little need? Schools are a useful and convenient as these public places—indeed more so, since they are centrally located and of sufficient size to meet the needs."

"Young life must find a means of self-expression and naturally accepts that source of amusement offered to it in the most attractive form. The social center, with its equipment for athletics and for games and social intercourse, surely provides an opportunity for interesting young people in the best and highest forms of self-development.

"Because of the great tide of immigrants upon our shores every year, Americans must make a stronger effort to have a stronger feeling of fellowship and brotherhood. The young people of today are to be the citizens of tomorrow. We must have men and women of power with high ideals of national brotherhood and justice. Girls of youth of today, too, are our surroundings such as they may have in our schools, used as social centers, and we shall find the men of tomorrow alert to civic and community interests.

"School buildings should also be used for free lectures. It has been said that the school building is the common forum where men and women of all social and intellectual grades meet on a level—as no where else—certainly not in the houses of worship where they are necessarily divided into separate and distinct communions. At scarcely another place, unless it be the polling place, can men of all classes meet on a common basis of citizenship; and even at the polls men are usually divided into hostile camps. Anything that draws men together on a common footing of rights, powers, and duties and enjoyments is a great social and moral power for good citizenship. Next to the public school, which tends to social, hereditary and acquired social and class distinctions, the public lecture hall in the public schoolhouse and paid for out of the public purse, is the most thoroughly democratic of our public institutions.

"There must, by some place where local questions may be discussed. The school building is most appropriate because people who have common interests may gather and discuss what is best for the welfare of their country, the nation, or class or position in life.

Although a great many are interested in civic questions, there is a decided lack of real workers. In some of the large cities like Rochester, Boston, Cincinnati, and Chicago, different clubs have united to form a great civic club.

Entertainments and free lectures are given and civic questions are discussed.

Civic meetings in school would increase the number of workers in that field.

"Thus it is seen that social centers in public school buildings may meet a necessity in the life of today because they are places for discussion, places of entertainment, and places where civic and governmental welfare may be discussed and improved.

A Good Household Salve.

Ordinary ailments and injuries are not of themselves serious, but infection or low vitality may make them dangerous. A salve which will heal a wound or hurt because it is small, a blood poison has resulted from a pin-prick of scratch. For all such ailments Buckle's Arnica Salve is the best. It is a salve which heals the hurt; it is antiseptic; it infects and prevents dangerous complications. Good for all Skin Diseases, Plasters, Skin Rashes, External Wounds, Burns, and 250 other from your Druggist:

MAUDE WILLS.

The evening of the third day of the Chautauqua Miss Maude Wills of New York city will give an interpretation of the literary and dramatic art, generally concealed by sketchy criticism to be equal to the task of interpreting real literary masterpieces so that the average audience enters fully into the enjoyment of the art of the play, "The Merchant," by Shakespeare, which is a story of was fundamentally.

This is sharply drawn as a cameo, and Miss Wills' interpretation only accentuates its vital meanings. Before Miss Wills gave it the first time she spent at least a solid year in careful investigation to make sure that the battle was not a misrepresentation and that it was constructively agreeable to the tendencies of American institutions.

Doctors and Drugs.

A large number of physicians are themselves addicted to the use of morphine. This is no wonder, considering that they are often forced to do it, and the fact that they are continually handling the drug. Conscientious physicians have for some time past refused to administer it, but then, what was the use, while there were so many others willing to do so?

Age of the Goshawk.

The average age of an ostrich is thirty years, and the annual yield of a bird in captivity is from two to four pounds of plumes.

Obmibus appropriation bills items will be slashed at every possible point. The governor also is considering a cut in the state road appropriations of the legislature exceeded those of any session, according to figures just compiled. The governor, however, will scarcely be able to make any cuts in this direction, as most of the money has already been expended.

The expenses of the session totaled $785,389, while the expenses of the 1911 session was $692,708, while that of the 1909 session $617,181.95.

The governor is expected to sign the Chicago park consolidation bill. The attorney general has found no flaws in the bill, and up one has asked for a hearing. It is expected also to carry in hot weather to keep the water at the proper temperature. The changing of the water and the regulation of the temperature is done automatically in the fish car, and this system reduces mortality among the fish to a minimum.

There are a number of devices used in connection with the tanks which enable the attendants to handle the fish safely and easily, and the transfer from the hatcheries to the car and from the car to the waters of the lake or river can be made without incurring the death of the fish.

Tired, Aching, Muscles Relieved.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Linnemann highly applied, a little quiet, and your soreness disappears like magic. Nothing ever happened to you, you know, like this.

Stone, pain, stiffness and soreness.

He has affected to render the military independent of, and superior to the civil power.

He has combined, with others, to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our country, and has acknowledged by our laws, giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation.

For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

For protecting them by a mock trial, from justice, for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of our country.

For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world:

For imposing taxes on us without our consent;

For depriving us, in many cases, of the benefits of trial by jury;

For transporting us beyond the seas to be tried for pretended offenses;

For abolishing the free system of English law in a neighboring province, establishing a military arbitrary power, and opining boundaries, so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule, into these colonies.

He has abdicated government here, by placing it out of his protection, and we are at present.

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burned our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is, at this time, transporting large bodies of foreign troops to our country, to oppress the inhabitants of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun, with circumstances of cruelty and perfidy, scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the hand of a civilized nation.

He has dissolved legislative assemblies, and taken, captive on the high seas, to bear arms against their country, to become the executioners of their friends and brethren, or to fall themselves by their hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections among us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our trou-

DOCUMENT THAT MADE A NATION

Text of the Immortal Declaration of Independence With Which All Americans Should Be Familiar.

HEN IN the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume, among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the law of nature and of nature's God entitles them; a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to this separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator, with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter, or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its power in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

Providence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, we are now, with a high sense of truth, to declare that such a change has now begun in these colonies;

here, the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all age, sexes and conditions.

In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms; our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury, and, in every act which may define a tyrant, we hold them to be the ruler of a free people.

Now we are no longer waiting in attention to our British brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts made by their legislature to extirpate and enslave us. We have petitioned for a redress in our circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them, by the ties of our common kindred, to disavow these usurpations, which, under their government, have desolated so many of their subjects.
