PROSPERITY-FIRST.

When the country is prosperous the political party which governs gets the credit. No matter how little it is, the party is favored. Inversely, when hard times come the party in power is thrown out of office whether it be in the slightest degree responsible. Presently speaking, our country is in an economic heaven, every party is in favor of it. On the other hand, when an administration holds office during a depression, it is natural to claim the credit. "That is all the fault of the other party." Prosperity means the pocketbook's size and it is a rash political prophet who will predict the defeat of the party in power when things are progressing well.

The political campaign management is entirely correct when it declares the "feast is prosperity." Once it deviates from this party it is a disaster. Presently, voters are not in the majority party.

To say that a question about everyone talks is not an issue may seem absurd, but it is nevertheless true. Most voters are very conservative and nothing can be done to indicate that to other considerations when they mark their ballots. When a man who would like to see the Eighteenth Amendment repealed, for instance, votes for a candidate rated as dry—then that often happens—it is not because he has undergone a change of mind, but because other considerations are more important.

The law of prohibition. Presently friend ships enter in; so does the personality of the candidates. Next, party affiliation.

In the primaries the candidates come, page 1, it is certain that thousands of Republicans who take the wet end of the prohibition argument will vote for a dry candidate because they believe it would be better for the country to have a Republican president. Which is to say that they will be influenced finally by the prosperity argument.

Prohibition has never been a party matter. It has been a party issue for days in both camps and in all sections. Imperialism as prohibition is, widespread as is the controversy. It has engendered, it has not obliterated, existing party lines. The party line is the constant. When the ballots are counted next month, it probably will be found that the Republicans, on the question of prohibition, have retained control.

MR. KIPLING AGAIN.

Rudyard Kipling, impelled by some critics as a bright, literary light, and by others as one not so bright, has broken out into verse again. Whether one thinks of him as a poet or not bright, he can be no question, judging from some of his latest work, that he is a little weak on logic. Among other things, in his latest poem, "The Vineyard," he has this little poem entitled "The Vineyard." In this poem, according to the critics, he has taken Uncle Sam to task for his conduct in the aftermath of the World War. The poem is very properly enclosed in a volume entitled "Debts and Credits." The rhyme about the vineyard starts off as follows:

But his ways were not right.

As we were of the world, God.

We were not of the world, no.

We're in still now,

We're made now,

We're not the world, no.

It is supposed to refer to the part of Uncle Sam that he has taken that he came in late, grabbed off all the plunder without making any sacrifice of his own. This may be all right in poetry, if you have a right to the plunder, but, how, fail to get the logic of it.

Will some of my friends in the country tell me about what Uncle Sam received? Up to this time, I have not heard of any that paid mostly in ingratitudes. And the load he has borne and will bear includes only the killed and wounded, but about fifty or so billion dollars of the country's debts. The war expense has been entirely liquidated.

It is to be admitted that there probably would have been any spoils that he had not. Uncle Sam, however, has just when he did make those spoils.

A careful inventory of his pillars falls to discern. The pillars of society, like Alceste, Lorraine, and the like, are in Africa and Asia, and, any territory in Africa or among the islands of the Pacific.

If Uncle Sam took over the spoils, he is holding out on his boys and girls, and we are waiting to see about it.

THIRD POLLING PLACE NEEDED

At the registration figure for the first Barrington precinct clearly indicates the necessity of providing a third polling place in Barrington township.

The registration in the precinct now exceeds its estimated name, and will probably run up to 1,150 or 1,200 at the conclusion of the second registration day—next Tuesday.

For the convenience of voters, and to lighten the task of the judges and clerks of election, the first precinct should be split in two and a new precinct inaugurated in the vicinity of Barrington.

The state law provides that another polling place may be established whenever the registration in a precinct exceeds the number of registered voters in that precinct.

At state primaries when several large towns, when a blank bullet almost as large as a table cloth must be checked and tallied, the task of the election officials is a difficult one.

COLD OPEN800 BOYS BUILD
OUTDOOR THEATRE

St. Charles, Ill.—Nearly 600 boys have worked on the gigantic outdoor theatre which is being built on the hillside of a hill near the St. Charles High School. The theatre will be dedicated by the art extension committee of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America late this month.

The outdoor stage is to be 100 feet wide and 100 feet deep. The seats will be built in the round, so that the audience will be outlined by the management office, Frank D. Whipple.

The theatre has a floor capacity of 1,000 people, and the stage on each side, under construction, is 100 feet wide.

Electric lighting is being used.

A complete electric lighting system will be installed.

For the placing the seats are four feet wide with a rise of two feet, so that the audience will be up against the back of the head.

At the end of the center aisle the boy scouts will have a platform, leading from the stage, leading from the end behind the stage.

Near the theater a small park has been built, containing a band stand with trees, a shelter and flower beds.
