Square Meal for Shrubbery Twice A Year Is Enough

Shrubs need so little care that they are frequently denied even the little they should have. If they are to remain vigorous and healthy, it takes time and money to landscape the home grounds, and once it has been done it is good judgment to keep the plants in good condition.

TO FEED SHRUBS GROWN AT A HEDGE, USE FOUR POUNDS OF PLANT FOOD FOR EVERY 50 FT. OF HEDGE.

The Largest Diamond

The largest diamond ever found weighed 3,024 1/2 carats or 1 1/2 pounds. It was presented by the Transvaal government to King Edward of England. Later it was cut up and added to the crown jewels in the Tower of London.

Plant Food for Fruit Trees to Improve Results

Poor results from fruit trees in home gardens are likely to be due to underfeeding. Such trees are often crowded and have to compete with other plants for nourishment. By proper feeding wood growth is encouraged, your trees are brought more quickly to a bearing size and trees which have reached bearing age are induced to bear larger crops.

Fruit trees growing in a lawn may be fed the same way that shade trees are, by making small holes in the ground with a crowbar or auger under the "water-drip" or outer circle of the tree top, and filling the holes with plant food mixed with sand or soil half and half. Trees growing in cultivated soil may be fed with surface applications of plant food. Use three pounds of complete plant food for each inch of diameter of the tree, placed in the holes made in the lawn, or spread evenly over cultivated ground under the tree top and then stirred in.

Grapes and small fruits, such as gooseberries, currants and raspberries, also need feeding. Apply plant food at the rate of four pounds to 100 square feet, or a tablespoonful to the square foot, over the area occupied by the roots of the plants in the early spring and work it into the soil in the first cultivation.

Italian Broccoli Easy Vegetable to Grow; Plant May 15

Broccoli, an old-time vegetable in one form, has become popular through the introduction of a green branching type, the Italian green sprouting broccoli. Broccoli originally could not be told when it came to the table from cauliflower. It had the same white curd and almost an identical flavor. The chief difference was in its style of growth.

The green broccoli, however, is of an entirely different appearance and flavor. Its fasciated thick stems bear dense heads of green flower buds. Unlike the cauliflower and white curd broccoli, these heads are of perfect flowers and do not degenerate forms such as the "caul" of the white types.

The vegetable is easily grown in the home garden, requiring only the same treatment as cabbage. There is no necessity for tying up leaves as in cauliflower and the stalk bears a main head and when cut develops a number of side branches with edible heads.

Seed of Italian green sprouting broccoli should be sown now for an early crop in the garden. It will prove a popular garden novelty as well as a delicious addition to the table.
