Goat's Whiskers

The herds of goats that browse on the hills of Cyprus are the principal producers of lanadum. While feeding on certain shrubs their whiskers become matted with the gum that exudes. The thrifty goat-herders carefully comb this gum from the whiskers of the goats, and it is from this substance that lanadum is obtained.

Your Telephone pays for itself

MANY A TELEPHONE has more than paid for itself by bringing in more butter, eggs, poultry and garden produce in season. Market information procured by telephone, has saved much for farmers when buying supplies. There are extra profits when selling. The telephone effects other economies by running errands, saving time, and bringing help in emergencies. Consider its value per penny of cost. Nothing does so much for so little.
