

Cadwallader Is President, Bank Clearing House

Business Men and Depositors Show Willingness to Cooperate

C. Cadwallader has been appointed president of the Merchants' Clearing House Association of Barrington, an organization sponsored by the Lions club to assist depositors of the First State bank to liquidate their claims. Mr. Cadwallader is also secretary of the Lions club.

The success of the plan has been indicated strongly by the willingness of many of the bank's depositors to cooperate, according to B. A. Schroeder, secretary of the clearing house.

Thursday morning Mr. Schroeder held a conference with Edward Sloan, assistant deputy receiver in charge of the First State bank and also treasurer of the local clearing house. Mr. Sloan presided and approval and cooperation to the clearing house's success.

Canvas Begins

Thursday afternoon Mr. Schroeder began a canvass of the local business and professional men to determine which business houses will credit the depositors' assignments. The pleasing of these business men who have heard the plan well explained at the clearing house is practically assured, he said. A minimum of business places is considered necessary to facilitate the operation of the clearing house. Since there are about 75 in all in the village it is expected that the minimum goal will be reached with considerable ease, probably by the first part of next week.

The services of a large variety of business and professional men are needed. This time last year, apparent in the functioning of an almost identical plan in Des Plaines, where depositors used their assignments in a large variety of business places, including groceries, hardware, coal, meat, automobiles, and newspapers; professional men, including doctors and dentists; and employers in paying their employees and accepted the depositors' assignments in Des Plaines.

Not Compulsory

The plan is not at all compulsory to either depositors or merchants. The depositors who wish to use the clearing house merely assign 10 per cent of their account to the bank at the time it closed in 1932 to the clearing house. After that, they use any part or all of the 10 per cent for full cash value as payments of accounts at business houses that cooperate in the plan. There is no expense involved for any depositors.

The merchants who accept these assignments keep them until the bank pays its anticipated dividend.

Stores Experience Heaviest Christmas Selling in 3 Years

A lively revival of retail business has been experienced in Barrington this month according to several merchants.

Although December started about any boom rush for Christmas merchandise, trade improved steadily from the first day until Monday night when Christmas Eve marked the end of gift buying.

The improvement in heavy and expensive merchandise was not great, according to reports, but the demand for small merchandise was strong beyond expectations.

Among merchants reporting increased demand for small gift articles were R. Lipovsky, E. K. King, C. Cadwallader, W. N. Landwehr, and Hugo Fredlund. F. C. Schubert, Ernest Ankele and Jack Weidner reported a healthy demand for food, bakery and candy trade. Other merchants, not interviewed, were optimistic for the month's business.

According to a consensus of all reports, the holiday trade was the best since 1931. Similar reports have come from other cities and villages throughout the district, and national reports show a business improvement. This is interpreted by many to mean that conditions are slowly but steadily improving and will be as much better in 1935 than they were this year as the margin of improvement experienced this year over last.

Proposed Federal Sales Tax Might Cause End of State Occupational Act

A manufacturer's sales tax bill may be introduced into the session of congress convening in January following the annual New Year's holiday.

This information, released in Washington Monday, is of immediate interest to local persons as well as citizens in other Illinois communities in that the proposed tax bill, if enacted into law, probably would be the beginning of the end of the state occupational sales tax law. According to reports from Springfield, Illinois congressmen might support the bill if it provides for allocation back to the states of funds sufficient to replace certain state taxes (the sales tax in Illinois).

This federal excise would be added into the prices of produce sold to wholesalers and retailers. This proposition would not cause a collection and bookkeeping nuisance for retailers and be a source of irritation to ultimate buyers as is the case with the present occupational sales tax law.

Several Important Real Estate Transfers Near Here Completed

Four new families have purchased homes in the Barrington estate district recently and one family has sold its 15-acre lot to go into farming rather than sell.

The Edson Dicks, now of Lake Park, recently bought 250 beautiful acres in a $50,000 transaction, it was reported, and are pouring over blue prints for remodeling the farmhouse in their land. It has stretches of forest, still untouched, and a little gem of a lake.

The J. Ballard Moores, town dwellers since their wedding in Washington, D. C. six years ago, have also bought a farm in the Barrington region with a farmhouse, livestock and a fine view of the country. They plan to remodel the house next summer.

The Andrew Dallstroms have bought 23 acres nearby, on which they plan to build a summer home and spend week-ends in Barrington. Their land also has a large lake and old oak trees.

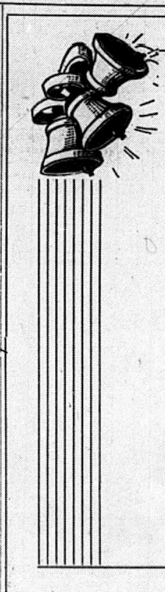

After having enjoyed their fifteen acres thoroughly, the Malcolm Shroyers decided to go into farming more extensively and sold their first lot, complete with its white shingled house and picturesque white rail fence to Edgar P. Heitler of 124 W. Russell street.

The Shroyers then purchased a large farm east of Lake Zurich. They are now busy remodeling the farmhouse on that land while their three little daughters enjoy the big farm.

Shroyers last summer, grows strong and sturdy. Mrs. Shroyer's sister, Miss Louise Wood, has arrived from the east to spend the holidays with the Shroyers.

2 Degrees Below Zero Wednesday Warmer Thursday

The first sub-zero weather of the season for this community arrived early Wednesday morning when the temperature dropped to 2 degrees below. This low point was reached after 4 a. m. and was maintained until after 8 a. m. Wednesday night the temperature dropped towards the zero mark, but started upward early Thursday morning.

A day of uncertain weather conditions, icy roads, which made motor travel dangerous at any time, became worse at about 9 p. m. when a shower of freezing mist swept through the district. On the highways in all directions from Barrington, automobiles skidded along over slick ice while drivers frantically tried to see through glazed windshields.

A brief snowfall at 10 p. m. coated the roads and improved driving conditions.

The severe cold snap arrived about 2 a. m. Wednesday.

Lighted Star, Trees, Wreaths Beautify the Village for Christmas

Barrington Christmas decorations this year included two particularly attractive effects—the new blue spruce planted at Railroad park, lighted in varied colors, and a huge star, outlined in lights at Jewel Park with the Jewel building as a background modernistically lighted with broad green and red bands.

There seemed to be more Christmas trees in Barrington homes this year than in the past three or four and about twenty homes used outdoor lighting. Wreaths with lighted candles ornamented numerous windows.

In the downtown sections there were a few lighted trees, several attractive Christmas scenes, and at one entrance, lighted festoons of holly. Most of the stores used holly, tinsel, Christmas bells or red and green festoons in their decorations.

No Tax on Water, Gas and Current High Court Holds

Annual Expense of $3000 to Local Citizens Is Avoided

Local residents have escaped a possible extra expense of between $2500 and $3000 as the result of a ruling handed down last Thursday by the Illinois supreme court whereby sale of water, gas and electricity must not bear a 2 per cent occupational tax.

The only a theoretical saving inasmuch as the village had not charged a tax on the sale of water and the Public Service Co. of Northern Illinois' charged a state regulated rate for electricity which did not include a 2 per cent tax item. The village was one of many municipalities which consistently refused to pay the tax as charged by the state. However, if the supreme court ruling had upheld the tax, the village would have had to pay it and would have found it necessary to pass it on to the consumer.

A recent interpretation from the attorney-general that a retailer may add the tax as a separate item of expense to be born by the consumers, might have given the service company the authority to pass the tax on as an additional charge.

The saving is, therefore, prevention of expense here added to the cost of living next year.

Ruling that municipal and privately owned utilities are not within the scope of the sales tax act, the high court held that power companies need not pay the levy on water, gas and electricity.

The state will be deprived of more than $6,000,000 revenue each year as a result.

In another case, the court ruled that the tax must be paid by coal planters.

Plumbing and heating supply houses, the supreme court ruled, do not have to pay the sales tax on supplies sold to contractors. In such cases, the opinion stated, the contractors are required to pay the tax as they are making the sale before the consumption of the supplies.

In the utility case, the court held that the companies are engaged in rendering a service and that the legislature apparently did not intend to include them under the act, since an attempt to amend the bill by extending its operation to public utility companies was defeated.

The opinion also noted that when the first sales tax act was held unconstitutional, the supreme court referred to the businesses involved as being able to pass the tax on to their customers. Utilities could not do this without consent of the Illinois Commerce Commission.

In the coal decision, the court denied the plea of the 27 companies, who appealed from an adverse decision of the Cook county circuit court.

Public School Is Disinfected for Opening January 2

Many New Cases of Illness Reported as Epidemic Rages On

The public school building, following a thorough cleaning in which the floors, woodwork and walls were washed and disinfected with soap and water and a chlorine disinfectant, will be ready to open on scheduled time, Wednesday, Jan. 2. The decision to reassemble the classes at the usual time was reached by the school board this week, according to Superintendent E. S. Smith. It is believed that the present "flu" epidemic which caused the closing of the school on December 18 will have subsided greatly by the opening day.

The wave of illness spread over the village with great rapidity. School children contracted the epidemic more than adults, and on December 17, the day before school closed, about 50 per cent of the pupils of the lower grades were absent from school because of illness.

The epidemic is still raging, according to a report from a local physician, there being as many persons ill in the middle of this week as there were a week ago. The majority of the cases are reported as either "flu" or severe cold. New cases have been reported since Christmas.

New Parking Space on Park Avenue Is Ready for 50 Cars

So few residents are taking advantage of the new parking space on Park avenue that Chief of Police E. W. Wade is puzzled over the matter.

There is room for 50 cars on the new pavement. If all are parked at an angle of 45 degrees angle, he reported, and many persons may have their cars there all day. It should be particularly convenient for those whose cars are taken into Chicago for all day or for business men who would like to have their cars within easy access.

Parking in the central downtown district tends to inconvenience customers of local business establishments. Chief Wade declared and added that it would benefit the whole community if local residents kept the strictly central shopping district free from all-day parking.

During storms and icy weather, particularly, shoppers like to ride up to a store to do buying and if employees and managers use all accessible parking space, customers are less likely to stop and shop, he said.

Diagonal lines to indicate the proper angle for parking will be painted on the street as soon as the weather is warmer. Last week, paint froze on the brushes, according to the chief, so the lines were forced to postpone work until the temperature rises.

Comedy Pictures Figure in Holiday Program at Catlow

New Year Will Be Welcomed by Musical Comedy and a Rousing Sing

For the holiday season the Catlow theatre is offering a wealth of entertainment with a range of variety and price. The bargain night offerings, both this and next week Friday, and the early matinee Sundays and New Year's Day will provide splendid programs at nominal prices.

"Till Pix It," playing Friday night of this week, is a sparkling, down-to-earth comedy romance, scheduled as the week's bargain offering. Jack Holt, Winnie Lightner and Mona Harris play the leads in this number which tells a story of a big shot politician who couldn't elicit even "maybes" from the winsome little school teacher.

"The Richest Girl in the World" will occupy the feature spot of the Saturday's bill. Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea and Fay Ray are responsible for a really delightful picture. Situations, both humorous and wistful develop the theme of this story of "the richest girl who seeks a husband without knowledge of her great wealth. Women patrons will be presented with a new selection from the Owen dinnerware.

"Lady By Choice," the Sunday-Monday feature, brings as its star that grand, old trouper, May Robson, with Carole Lombard and Roger Pryor co-starring. Briefly, "Lady By Choice" tells the story of the two women, far different in appearance and station but really sisters under the skin.

Laurel and Hardy in "Oliver the 8th," together with news and singing are added items of interest for the Sunday-Monday bill.

Monday night at 11:15 p. m. the New Year's Eve Midnight frolic will be on its way with Dumb-Bell Letters as the opening laugh-wedge. Special musical comedy in color, featuring Sylvia Foss and the Paradise revue, and other short subjects will lead into the rousing midnight sing. After the "Merry Wives of Rehe" follows on the screen. This is a hilarity film with no sober moments. The cast was chosen without a single serious intent. Gur Ribben, Glenda Farrell, Frank McHugh and Roscoe Ates are stars that "go to town" in this comedy number. All in all the midnight frolic will be a gay event, and will usher in 1935 in the jolliest possible manner.

"The White Parade," which plays the Catlow theatre afternoon and evening of New Year's day and Wednesday and Thursday nights following, is the first film to glorify the profession of nursing. Most of the action is laid in a modern training school for nurses, and the story covers the three-year period from enrollment to graduation. Loretta Young and John Boles are co-starring. Special short subjects in color will be added attractions.

Buick Announces Four Sizes of Automobiles; on Display All Week

Four lines of motor cars were announced by Schauble Bros. and Collins, local agent for Buick Motor company in an advertisement in The Review last week. The 1935 cars covering the board range from the low medium to the high medium price fields and offer the largest variety of body types in the history of the Buick organization.

The new cars, keyed to modern requirements of style, comfort and performance, are being displayed simultaneously throughout the United States in the showrooms of Buick dealers and distributors. For the first time, the Buick Motor company enters a new year with four distinct groups of automobiles, all similar in design and construction, varying only in details of dimension and price class. The extensive line gives price coverage of approximately 27 per cent of the entire automobile market, a condition expected greatly to increase Buick volume during the coming year.

The 1935 Buick cars consist of the following groups:

The new series 40 Buick on a 117-inch wheelbase, having a valve-in-head straight-eight engine developing 53 horsepower at 3200 revolutions per minute. This car is now being produced in six body types.

The series 50 Buick for 1935 is built on a 119-inch wheelbase chassis and is produced in five body types. Before the addition of the Series 40, this car bore Buick's lowest price tag. It now is the second group in the company's program.

In still another price arena is the Series 60 Buick. Offered in six body types, including two convertible, the Series 60 is powered with a 100-horsepower valve-in-head engine.

In the deluxe field with its Series 90, is a group of eight automobiles. A limousine is included in the Series 90 body types as well as two convertibles—Adv.

13 Species of Birds Seen Near Barrington in Christmas Census

Tax Collections of $38,697.52 are Reported Locally

Penalty of 1 Per Cent on First Installment to Begin
January 1

The first installment of the 1933 Cook county tax collections for Barrington township amounted to $38,697.52 Thursday night when the books were closed for local collections. Friday morning the books will be taken to the office of the county treasurer where collections of the first installment will continue, according to R. G. Plagge, deputy collector. The total amount to be collected in both installments is $102,694.18.

After January 1 the property owners will be penalized 1 per cent per month on the first installment until property is put up for sale. Property owners who paid both installments before January 1 took advantage of a discount of 1.5 per cent for a period of four months on the account of their second installment. The majority of payments in Barrington during the month that collection have been made have included both installments.

The amount collected since the books have been in the hands of the local collector is considered to be a relatively fair figure since collections are being made more than three months earlier than last year, Mr. Plagge said. Last year the books were turned over to the county treasurer about April 1, with $45,636.87 collected.

The second installment of the 1933 taxes may be paid by May 1 without penalty. It has not yet been decided whether the second installment may be paid in Barrington prior to the penalty date. Although no official statement has been made to the effect, it is probable that this year's unusually early collection is being made with the intention of clearing up during the next few years the tax muddle of several years ago that resulted in delaying payments for one year ever since. It is also probable that 1934 taxes will be collected late in the fall of 1935.

Local Man Asked to Answer Charge in Probate Court

Arthur W. Catlow, 200 W. Station Street, appeared in probate court of Lake county at Waukegan Thursday morning to explain use of funds of the estate of his deceased brother, Clarence, of whose estate Mr. Catlow has been the administrator.

The amount concerned was in the neighborhood of $1700, according to Lake county court records. Action was postponed because the probate judge who ordinarily handles such cases was ill and the case was continued until Saturday or Monday. Meanwhile Mr. Catlow is retained at Waukegan.

Fogs Form Near Surface of Earth From Moist Air
Fogs are a special type of cloud which form on or near the surface of the earth from sudden condensation of moisture-laden air which carries some impurity on which the moisture can condense, says an authority in the Chicago Tribune.

An ideal condition for the formation of fogs exists at the Banks of Newfoundland. There the warm air over the Gulf stream meets the cold air that accompanies the cold Arctic current coming past Greenland. The presence of salt spray in the air adds the last condition needed for a dense fog.

The infinitesimal drops of water that compose a fog vary from twenty-five hundredths of an inch to one twenty-five thousandths of an inch in diameter. Raindrops are much larger, but never exceed one-fourth of an inch in diameter. When they tend to grow larger they are soon forced to break up as they fall through the air. Raindrops can not fall through still air at a speed greater than 24 feet a second. It is fortunate for us that the size and speed of raindrops are thus naturally limited, or we might be pelted with buckets of water falling with the great speed due to gravity and the height of the cloud above the earth.

Butter and eggs are the new. For all of us, 1934 brought its mixture of joy and sorrow, of disappointment and success. And, 1935 waits at the door with new opportunities for a achievement and happiness. The members of this organization wish one and all the best that life has to offer in the new year.

PASSED WRONG SALES TAX BILL

In establishing its special record of 80 hours, the general assembly in its 4th special session went so fast that it amended the wrong law in its effort to extend the state occupational tax beyond June 30, 1935. About $500,000 was appropriated to pay for the 4th special session, but indications are that its work will have to be done over again at the regular session next month. The title of the bill passed follows:

"An act to amend Sections 2 and 3 of 'An act in relation to a tax upon persons engaged in the business of selling tangible property at retail, the disposition thereof and making certain appropriations in connection therewith,' approved March 22, 1933."

Both the house and senate journals show that the above was the title of the only bills considered at the session for the purpose of extending the sales tax. Each day the title appeared in the journals and each succeeding day the record of the previous day was approved.

Page 938 of the session laws, 58th general assembly, 1933, shows that the title of the bill passed at the 4th special session was the title of the old 3 per cent sales tax, approved March 22, 1933, and later declared unconstitutional by a unanimous vote of the Illinois supreme court.

Consequently the present occupational tax law will expire July 1, 1935, unless the extension act is re-passed at the regular session.

FOR SAFER HIGHWAYS

Why would it not be a feasible project to insert red glass reflectors on all concrete abutments to bridges on our highways? Many curve signs are now equipped with them and they can be seen at night from a quarter to half a mile away. Equip abutments and other dangerous projections along highways with red reflectors and night accidents will be cut down considerably. There probably is not a single man who has driven at night who has not had his heart jump up into his mouth, when just after passing a pair of bright headlights, he suddenly sees a concrete abutment on his right he has just barely missed. Some drivers have not missed them—and are now six feet under sod. Outline abutments, fences, etc., and night driving will be made much safer.—Register, Brookings, S. D.

THE BUSINESS FIGHT

It's not the size of the dog in the fight; it's the size of the fight in the dog.

Ever see a little dog clean up on a big one? Just because he had a little more of the same spunk and aggressiveness—a little more fight in him?

Many a little business has licked a bigger, older competitor just because it had a little more of the same spunk and aggressiveness—a little more plain, low-down fight.—News, Van Nuys, California.

HOME EDUCATION

"The Child's First School Is the Family"—Froebel

Mutual Recognition of Rights Is Essential

What are the qualities that make a person "livable with," as we say?

Is not the fundamental one respect for our own rights and for the rights of others? And is not one side of the question as important as the other?

If any child respect certain rights and privileges which belong to me as a parent, then I must respect rights and privileges that belong to him.

One of the first marked traits a child develops as soon as he is able to play with others is wanting to have things for his very own. He quickly learns the "mine" and "thine" of things and especially the "mine."

It is my book, my rattle, my ball, and great is the uproar when he is requested to share his property rights with another.

At this stage young mothers are often given to discouragement and make such remarks as "I do not know what I shall do with my boy. I fear he has an extremely selfish disposition. He refuses to let any other child so much as touch any of his playthings." But wait, dear mother, remember that instincts are crude when they first appear and must be wisely and patiently trained.

Let us first respect the child's rights and say, "Yes, it is your ball, but won't you let your little friend play with it."

By following this method we shall find the child becoming more and more aware of his playmate's as well as his own rights. He will share his favorite blocks with another not because some grown-up in authority says, "You must," but voluntarily because he respects the rights to another to share in his play.

The idea does not formulate itself in his little mind in so many words perhaps, but it is the response that follows from instinctively recognizing that he is being given his due and that it pays to mete out like measure to another.

Of necessity this expression must be guided and guarded, so that the best qualities of self find the readiest expression. Children are quick to accept the standards of living that we are privileged to set them, quick to respond to the frown or the smile and slow to question where they are accustomed to receive justice.

One of the greatest opportunities within reach of all mothers is through the medium of story-telling. Stories interest children enormously, absorbing the entire attention for the time being. They establish a bond of mutual sympathy between the story-teller and the listener.

They teach lessons of bravery, unselfishness, kindness, and a regard for truth, with no seemingly effort to those directions. They also develop the imagination.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN WASHINGTON

(Courtesy The United States News)

Senator Vandenberg, presidential aspirant, will insist in the senate that James A. Farley divorce himself from one or the other of his two conflicting offices—postmaster general and chairman of the democratic national committee.

NRA is about ready to admit it cannot enforce payment of assessments by business enterprises to maintain code authorities, request of congress to this new form of business tax, running under half of the $100,000,000 and more approved assessments.

Pressure for old-age pensions, put on after the recent protest of vital hint that they might not be voted by congress this session, has been so great as to make early action highly probable. The demand back of this idea arises from the fact that it far surpasses demand for the soldiers' bonus.

The administration will try to compromise the bonus issue. The vote to override a veto are already counted so there is no choice but to put in a clause enabling the needy to get their certificates cashed. This may cost about $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 depending on how congress happens to define the word "needy."

A program of public works expenditures totaling $1,000,000,000 over the next 20 to 30 years is envisioned by the national resources board. Reporting to President Roosevelt on December 17, this board lays down the broad outline for development of natural resources of the nation at a cost of from $3,500,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 a year. This expenditure would be by the federal government, the states and the cities. It would include such items as $12,000,000,000 for grade crossing elimination; $5,000,000,000 for development of rivers in the interest of navigation and hydro-power production; and $3,500,000,000 for construction of rural highways.

Many a new deal alphabetical agency just now is suffering from rest, tough out-is being administered for an estate. The McManis estate, which is nothing more than as pretty a piece of hardwood as ever stood outdoors. The float of stone we call it. Trying to open it to a profit and hang on as administrator to some other man won't step in and give that stuff away in my particular hard nut. And it's a chore, Elliott.

"I like the way that you looked at Nick Brandon in court this afternoon. No young man has looked at him the way I did. I can remember. That's why I telephoned Bridger: because I liked the way you looked at Brandon and because I'm about worn out trying to crack a hard nut. That's why I'm here."

"Maybe, from what Bridger told me, and from what I've seen of you, you might maybe, perhaps, like to crack a crack at this nut. I'm through, Elliott. I've given the job all I have. I'm at my wit's end and the estate's at its rope's end. It's no use. I'm a failure and the truth is that maybe, perhaps, possibly I might do a right fair job of begging you to come and help."

Elliott did not speak, but watched Able as he fumbled in his pocket for a sketch map. Able paused for a moment, and then continued:

"Come over by the window. Now, here's the lay-out,—spreading the map on the sill. 'Here's the railroad, main line. This is float of stone, a narrow strip, you see, seventy-five, forty feet wide. Four miles of slash to north of the mill. Our railroad goes up through the chopping so. I've got a good lot of timber on the road engine and freight cars, all more or less ready for junk. Here's the camp now and we're cutting on the north forty north. Got thirty odd hands there that pass for men."

"Harrington was handling it for me. Man named Buller's millwright and a fellow named Ruppert's boss at camp. Harrington's gone—driven out—and we're in the soup!"

He paused and looked at Elliott, whose keen eyes were studying the details of the map. "It's a hairy one. The locomotive broke down yesterday and unless the boys get her working the mill will be out of logs in a week. The mill itself is a grand old rule but saws, after a fashion. The lumber in the yards is mortgaged up to the last cull piece, there's not a log of it standing. Harrington was saving it as it came in; some of it. He had too many things to think about, Harrington did. The buyers due back any day, though. Market's up, I guess. Hell probably pay a fancy price for what we have to offer him."

Then he went to the particular problem confronting them. With the locomotive laid up the steady supply of logs from camp to mill would be cut off. Snow was falling lightly, now, but sleighing might be days distant. To log the mill by truck was impractical, he declared, unless the railroad equipment could be put in working condition they might be forced to shut down. Fortunately a reserve log supply of about 500 on hand, stacked high beside the pond.

"We'll have to break out this one deck now," Buller said. "Pond's about empty."

He whistled and waved to the pond man. Picking up a peavey he led the way toward that high bank of maple, beech and birch logs. "Try the big birch first," Buller said to the pond man.

They engaged the books of their peaveys; they heaved. The log rolled and worked for lumber down the incline to the water. Another . . . and still another, each coming away separately and starting on movement of others above them.

Buller said, "That d—d beech butt's in light," he said, tapping the log with his peavey pick. "Try her, Jim; now be careful. When she's in the water the whole deck'll move in a hurry."

They heaved to no result. With a sharp "Now!" they heaved again, but in vain. The log in the face of the deck at the height of a man's hip, refused to budge.

"Hold on! Give you a hand," Buller picked up a peavey and approached. "Be careful, now, Elliott! The foreman said, moving in toward the center which was under the towering facade of the deck."

"No on on—wait a minute. I'll do the risk-taking for this lay-out for a while." Buller made no reply but grinned. The pond man looked at Ben approvingly and spat on his hands.

Ben Elliott did not rely at once on his starting at the door as one will when debating with himself and preparing for argument with another. He twisted his head grave ly and smiled. Then he looked into Able's face.

"When do we start?" he asked. The justice swallowed.

"You ready now? Without knowing any more about it?"

"I know enough. It's good enough and it's Brandon who's meeting up the detail. . . . Let's go, Judge!"

"New boss."

"Him?" The trimmerman spat and leaned forward for a word of talking to Ben Elliott, at the water's edge of early day. "Say. . . . Ain't he the lad that ducked 'th' bull? 'N'd took a poke at Brandon?"

"Well, I be d—d! Only a kid. He may be a good hand on a brin' log but won't Nick Brandon and his men be able to handle him? He ain't young, Nick, ducked 'th' bull, and specially after this one took such pains to make himself unpopular with Mister Nick!"

"You. . . . He'll be duck soup for Brandon all right!"

The hand of the millwright's watch approached the hour. The signal came from the signal cord. The big shaft commenced to turn and from machine to machine went Buller while Able and Ben watched, examining bulging, grease cups, seeing that live up and down, and true. The pulleys turned slowly for a full five minutes and then as the cracked whistle atop the boiler house cracked its message that another working day had begun, the carriage swept forward and the saw snarled its way into a good maple log.

Ben went with Buller, then, from man to man and watched each do his work.

"You said I was as pretty a piece of hardwood as ever stood outdoors. If so, why's it in this jam?"

Able Armbrute lifted a hand in gesture and whispered sharply one word.

"Brandon!"

Ben put down the map, replaced the pipe stem between his teeth and shoved his hands deep into pockets. "Brandon? He needed 'Choke' on the stories I'd heard. . . . So Brandon's put you on the tologian? Why?"

Able shrugged. "Six years ago I was an administrator of a lumber camp and to keep the carrying charges from eating it up, I started to operate. There wasn't a chance to sell the stumpage to anybody but Brandon. Nobody's going to get their money into a devil-driven country like this! There are too many stories going round of what's happened to others who have tried to work alongside Nick. We had to cut and mill or sell the stumpage to Brandon at his own price. Maybe, if it had been for me, I'd have sold; but the owner of this timber is an old phan guy and . . . a man doesn't like to quit under these circumstances."

"But every man I've put on to run the thing has been beaten and I've had some good ones there. They can't get decent crews in the first place. Buller, the millwright, Thompson, the foreman, and a crazy Irishman named Bird-Eye Blaine, who's camp boss, are the only three men you can count on. Brandon spies the good men who come along and collects and works for lumber. He sees to it that his Bull Dalval drives 'em out of the country. And this matter of labor is only one item that he's made hard to supply."

"Until now he hasn't been able to touch me. I've managed to hold it out against him politically. But he's watching and the probate court is on his side. That d—d beech butt's in light, he said, tapping the log with his peavey pick. 'Try her, Jim; now be careful. When she's in the water the whole deck'll move in a hurry.'"

They heaved to no result. With a sharp "Now!" they heaved again, but in vain. The log in the face of the deck at the height of a man's hip, refused to budge.

Able shrugged. "Six years ago I was an administrator of a lumber camp and to keep the carrying charges from eating it up, I started to operate. There wasn't a chance to sell the stumpage to anybody but Brandon. Nobody's going to get their money into a devil-driven country like this! There are too many stories going round of what's happened to others who have tried to work alongside Nick. We had to cut and mill or sell the stumpage to Brandon at his own price. Maybe, if it had been for me, I'd have sold; but the owner of this timber is an old phan guy and . . . a man doesn't like to quit under these circumstances."

"But every man I've put on to run the thing has been beaten and I've had some good ones there. They can't get decent crews in the first place. Buller, the millwright, Thompson, the foreman, and a crazy Irishman named Bird-Eye Blaine, who's camp boss, are the only three men you can count on. Brandon spies the good men who come along and collects and works for lumber. He sees to it that his Bull Dalval drives 'em out of the country. And this matter of labor is only one item that he's made hard to supply."

"Until now he hasn't been able to touch me. I've managed to hold it out against him politically. But he's watching and the probate court is on his side. That d—d beech butt's in light, he said, tapping the log with his peavey pick. 'Try her, Jim; now be careful. When she's in the water the whole deck'll move in a hurry.'"

They heaved to no result. With a sharp "Now!" they heaved again, but in vain. The log in the face of the deck at the height of a man's hip, refused to budge.

"Hold on! Give you a hand," Buller picked up a peavey and approached. "Be careful, now, Elliott! The foreman said, moving in toward the center which was under the towering facade of the deck."

"No on on—wait a minute. I'll do the risk-taking for this lay-out for a while." Buller made no reply but grinned. The pond man looked at Ben approvingly and spat on his hands.

Ben Elliott did not rely at once on his starting at the door as one will when debating with himself and preparing for argument with another. He twisted his head grave

ly and smiled. Then he looked into Able's face.

"When do we start?" he asked. The justice swallowed.

"You ready now? Without knowing any more about it?"

"I know enough. It's good enough and it's Brandon who's meeting up the detail. . . . Let's go, Judge!"

"New boss."

"Him?" The trimmerman spat and leaned forward for a word of talking to Ben Elliott, at the water's edge of early day. "Say. . . . Ain't he the lad that ducked 'th' bull? 'N'd took a poke at Brandon?"

"Well, I be d—d! Only a kid. He may be a good hand on a brin' log but won't Nick Brandon and his men be able to handle him? He ain't young, Nick, ducked 'th' bull, and specially after this one took such pains to make himself unpopular with Mister Nick!"

"You. . . . He'll be duck soup for Brandon all right!"

The hand of the millwright's watch approached the hour. The signal came from the signal cord. The big shaft commenced to turn and from machine to machine went Buller while Able and Ben watched, examining bulging, grease cups, seeing that live up and down, and true. The pulleys turned slowly for a full five minutes and then as the cracked whistle atop the boiler house cracked its message that another working day had begun, the carriage swept forward and the saw snarled its way into a good maple log.

Ben went with Buller, then, from man to man and watched each do his work.

"You said I was as pretty a piece of hardwood as ever stood outdoors. If so, why's it in this jam?"

Able Armbrute lifted a hand in gesture and whispered sharply one word.

"Brandon!"

Ben put down the map, replaced the pipe stem between his teeth and shoved his hands deep into pockets. "Brandon? He needed 'Choke' on the stories I'd heard. . . . So Brandon's put you on the tologian? Why?"

Able shrugged. "Six years ago I was an administrator of a lumber camp and to keep the carrying charges from eating it up, I started to operate. There wasn't a chance to sell the stumpage to anybody but Brandon. Nobody's going to get their money into a devil-driven country like this! ## Palatine Coming Jan. 11 for Game on Local Floor

Game probably Will Decide Northwest Conference Champions

Since the Warren-Barrington game has been postponed because of the reopening of the Warren school, the Bronchos' next contest will be with Palatine the local gym January 11. This game will probably decide the championship as both teams are undefeated so far.

Beats Bronchos to 17 in Game at DeKalb Tournament

Members of the Bronchos basketball team accompanied by Coach Paul Clark traveled to DeKalb Wednesday morning to participate in the annual holiday tournament sponsored by the DeKalb Teachers' college. The Bronchos were pitted against the powerful LaSalle high school team in their first game Wednesday morning and lost 25 to 17.

The Bronchos had a bad first half, being trailing 17 to 3 at the end of the first half. In the second half, however, the Barrington team found their feet and outscored LaSalle 14 points to 11, to make the final score 28 to 17.

On the squad who went were Dan, Eilers, Latta, Mollenkamp, Workman, Whitman, Walter, Strabenski, Overhure, and Kuhn.
