"There are no educated men. There never have been. There never will be."

Considering the millions of dollars expended on public education in the United States annually, this quotation might lead many persons to conclude that we might as well cut appropriations abruptly—with the objective of educated men called so unreachable.

But Glenn Frank, even now tussling with budget problems to keep the University of Wisconsin operating as he believes it should, did not mean to express futility when he gave expression to the words quoted above.

He meant, rather, to help people to see education with an adjusted point of view—to inspire them to new understandings of its place in life.

"The men we may most justifiably call educated are simply the men who have never stopped in their pursuit of the flying goals of information and insight," amplified the Badger state's university head.

And he went on to point out that "Education suffers from calendaritis."

"Diplomas and degrees carry the subtle suggestion that a man's education is finished at a certain age and that he can then stop learning and begin living," he explains.

"But, when all is said and done, learning is a life job. Education is endless. A true education registers men at the cradle and graduates them at the grave."

Here is an important point that Mr. Frank makes:

"In many ways the adult years are better than youth for learning. There are things we learn more effectively when years have enriched us with experience. Research has proved that the best time to learn anything is just before we need to use it. And, finally, there are no better clues to learning than the difficulties that vex our personal, professional and public lives.

"An effort to understand one's time makes learning a living adventure."

Use a Pattern

MARY STARCK KERR

"It seems to me that half of the parents of the present day are failures," said a woman in a group discussing social conditions.

"Most of them don't seem to realize the importance of home influence, and the children grow up with little idea of good manners," said scarcely any good moral."

"Don't you think it has always been that way?" asked another member of the group. "It seems to me the very fact that so many parents of today are failures, shows that their parents were not really successful."

"No," said the first speaker. "I don't think it has always been as bad as it is now. It seems to me that the parents of the past generation tried to guide their children and to bring them up right."

"Then how do you explain the fact that so many of their children are failures as parents?" asked the friend.

"I have never thought of that," was the reply.

"The other woman smiled. Then she said, 'I have given this problem a good deal of consideration, and have come to the conclusion that many of the failures in bringing up children, are due to not using a pattern.'"

"What do you mean?" asked her friend. "A pattern in child training is a new idea to me."

"You can remember we used to have two kinds of rag carpets or rugs, hit and miss, and the pattern or striped kind. Now the way I see it, many parents bring up their children on hit and miss plan, following no pattern, but just letting whatever comes along go into the child's experience. Their discipline is haphazard. Some times the child is severely punished for not responding promptly to a command, while at another time, when the parent is in a happier mood, the same fault is apparently unnoticed. A whipping is given for some small misdemeanor and later, for a more serious offense the child does not happen to annoy. Not even a rebuke is given. What results can one expect from such a lack of method?"

"Now that I think of it," said the other woman, "that is a correct picture of the discipline in many homes of the past as well as the present, and I suppose that is one reason for failure. But give me an example of what you mean by the pattern method."

"The mother who has a pattern," answered her friend, "is consistent. The Golden Rule is the pattern by which she seeks to have her children model their lives, and the children are helped to do this by the constant application of the Rule to the relations between parents and children. According to this Rule, the mother will not treat her child in any way which she would not like to be treated if she were in the child's place, taking into account all the effects of any action.

"The result is, that reason and confidence instead of inconsistency and uncertainty rule the household. The child who appetite milk on the floor is not scolded, but is given a cloth to wipe it up. If he breaks a window or a dish, whether in his own home or the home of some one else, the penalty is not a whipping, but some kind of payment on his part for the damage. He may pay actual money from his allowance, or he may make the loss good in some other way. He and the parent put up the money together, or destroyed must consult together. Each such experience helps the child to understand the logic and results of mistakes in conduct, and is a lesson in 'fair play' and in the design in the pattern she is encouraging him to follow."

WHAT'S GOING ON IN WASHINGTON

Collective bargaining enforcement, struck from the federal statute books by invalidation of the NRA code, is once more assured a place on their pages as the house, after previous senate approval, passes, 139 to 48, the National Labor Relations Bill.

It continues the National Labor Relations Board, granting it enforcement powers far beyond those it formerly had. Company-supported unions are outlawed. The majority rule prevails in choice of bargaining agencies. Discrimination and coercion by employers for union activity are banned.

All is quiet on the dollar front, thanks to swift, silent action by Uncle Sam. The story as revealed by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau:

In the closing days of May, France clung to the gold standard by the most tenuous of threads. It calls for gold exceeding shipment facilities. Devaluation is impending, with a race indicated among the franc, pound, and dollar as a drop in value of competitive currencies tended to drag internal prices lower.

Into the breach stepped the American Treasury, with presidential approval, and advanced to the Bank of France many millions of dollars, leaving the gold so purchased in Paris vaults.

The hour of decisive action approaches regarding the "death sentence" to utility holding companies as home communitarian reports the Wheeler-Rayburn bill in a form leaving elimination of such units to the discretion of the Securities and Exchange commission.

The measure as passed by the senate would make mandatory the dissolution of all intermediate holding utility and the regional integration of properties held by those remaining.

Willie Altenburg Gets 3 of Locals 6 Hits Off Sun

Mundelein Foe of Bears Sunday in Game Here; Phyl Henseville on Hit

Carl's battling Billy Ruth in game treated Barrington's advantage. Willie Altenburg, a rather unsteady afternoon hero, hit 3 home runs, including a total of 6 runs by the rather wide margin, 6 to 1. It was the fourth loss, 6 to 1, for the Bears this season.

The Bears just could not get the batting punch that got the 21 hits and it runs in their last game with the Bradenton Braves. Although with six hits in the game, Altenburg, who has hit 10 home runs in the other 14 games, had his best hitting season in the 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 6th innings.

Bears Weakened Although not to detract from Carl's well-earned victory, it should be added that the Bears were plainly weakened by the loss of three regulars, Charlie and Rudy Berg, and Art Workman, who had been helping the locals to make a better scoring.

Willie Altenburg, who has hit safely in 4 trips to the plate; he secured his season batting average to the high mark of .530. He far ahead of the rest of his teammates in this department.

Need Players The Bears have been treated about handed in the number of the players on the squad lately and as a result manager, J. Wiseman has announced that he needs more players to join the club. He should get in touch with him immediately.

On next Sunday the Bears will play home again, taking on the Bradenton nine at the local stadium. The Bears have been booked for the Fourth of July combat on Thursday.
