Since 1933, the state has renounced its major activities through the retail sales tax.

An Oriental Conveyance

The vehicle called a palanquin is an Oriental conveyance, often associated with long distances by travelers where railroads or good carriage roads do not exist. It is a wooden box, with shutters like Venetian blinds. At each end of the palanquin two rings are fixed, and the palanquin-bearers support the conveyance by a pole passing through these rings.
