

Personal Property Delinquents Given to April 1 to Pay

By paying their taxes at the county treasurer's office before April 1, personal property tax delinquents in Lake county can avoid justice court proceedings. It was decided last week at a meeting of justices of the peace, the delinquent tax committee and Assistant State's Attorney Okei S. Fugus.

Court proceedings will be started after April 1 by the county against personal property tax delinquents who have willfully refused to pay their tax bills or have neglected to make the payments as required by law.

While no pressure will be made on delinquents who are on the poor relief rolls or are working on WPA projects, the county government intends to carry through with the court proceedings to force the collection of taxes from those able to pay.

At the meeting all but one of the justices agreed to take a hand in helping the county collect the delinquent taxes.

The procedure for the collection of the delinquent taxes, as outlined by the committee of the board of supervisors composed of Emanuel Moroney, Charles J. Horschberger and Otto J. Boehm, and Assistant State's Attorney Fugus, is to give the delinquents notice by legal publication that the taxes must be paid by April 1.

After that day, the names of the property owners and the amounts of their tax delinquency will be filed with the justices of the peace in the various communities of the county.

The tax delinquents will then be given the opportunity to make their payments to the justices of the peace. If no payments are forthcoming, regular court proceedings will follow and summonses will be issued against the delinquents to appear for hearings.

Wherever judgments are taken by the county against the tax delinquents, the county may seize personal property and auction it off at a public sale to satisfy the amount of the judgment. Aside from the amount of the tax delinquency, the judgment will include court costs and the expenses of the public sale.

Modern Woodmen Is Reported Solvent

Mrs. Arthur Naylor Suing for Divorce

Mrs. Kathryn E. Naylor, Crystal Lake, charges Arthur Naylor with habitual drunkenness in a bill for divorce and injunction filed in McHenry county circuit court Monday by Attorney Walter Kelley. The bill states the Naylor's were married October 18, 1917 and have one daughter, Elizabeth Aurora, 18 years of age. It adds that the defendant is "rapidly dissipating his property" and that an injunction should be issued by the court restraining him from disposing of his property that includes stocks and securities. Mr. Naylor is employed at Lemont, Ill., according to the bill. The plaintiff asks alimony and attorney's fees.

Uses Coffee Can As Safe; $60 Missing

Using a coffee can for a safe was not the safest thing after all, Bernard Ruby, manager of the Western Food Mart, discovered when he came to work last Friday morning. The can, which contained $60, was gone from its customary place on the shelf. The only clue was some tea spilled on the floor.

There is no safe in the store and the coffee can was used to hold the day's receipts as an overnight bank. A rear door was found unlocked but Ruby was unable to remember whether it was locked the night previous.
