Reviews Musicians

Speaking to the study group of the Barrington Woman's club at the public library Tuesday afternoon, Rev. H. L. Eagle gave a most interesting talk on "Outstanding American Musicians."

"Although America has no first rank composers such as Bach, Wagner or Beethoven," he said, "there are several men who have contributed much to American life in the form of folk and classical music."

"Among these are Stephen Foster, Edward MacDowell, Ethelbert Nevin, Charles Wakefield Cadman, Percy Grainger and Walter Damrosch. The last two are Americans by adoption."

"While most of Stephen Foster's works were concerned with the south it is interesting to note that he was never south of the Mason-Dixon line until just before his death."

"His brother was looking at a map and chanced to see the name 'Swanee River.' It fitted into a melody Stephen had composed—the name for one of his most famous songs. He was born in Pittsburg in 1826."

"Like many a genius, Foster was very poor in school. He spent a short time in college, then left for Cincinnati where he wrote

"Louisiana Bell" and Old Uncle Ned." His next two songs were "Way Down South," which made him famous and "Oh Susanna."

"He was absolutely untrained as a musician and many critics say that training would have spoiled his natural genius. His marriage in 1850 was quite unhappy. He spent his last years in New York City where he died in dire circumstances when only 28 years old."

"Ethelbert Nevin was the son of a part-musician, businessman. Born in 1862 in Pittsburg, he showed signs of genius at the age of four when he improvised music for his friends and neighbors. He was a failure as a student and tried working in a railroad office. He soon gave this up to devote his entire time to music. He was very irresponsible about finances and depended a great deal on his family for support. His best known song, "The Rosary," sold over 2 1/2 million copies in 30 years."

His health failed him after the serious illness of his wife and he died following a stroke at the age of 38.

"Edward MacDowell was born in a brownstone front house in what is now known as New York's east side. His father was a Quaker who did not immediately subscribe to the idea of anything as frivolous as music and art."

"His mother seeing that the boy had talent took him to Germany to study at the age of 12."

"While there, his drawings were brought to the attention of a famous artist who tried to persuade the boy to give up music and study art."

"His music finally won out, and he spent some time studying under the finest of teachers. When only 18 he was suggested as the 'Director of Music at the Frankfort Conservatory, but the directors disapproved because of his youth. He wrote his first concerto in a little over two weeks time."

"He married an American girl who had been one of his pupils and they made their first home in a cottage near Wiesbaden, Germany. He was visited by a group of Americans in 1888 and asked to return to America to take over the music department of Columbia university."

"He was unhappy there and found the mechanics of college life very tiresome."

"He had quite a bitter controversy with the officials as the result of which his health broke and his mind was a blank for two years before his death."

In conclusion, Rev. Eagle reviewed the lives of Cadman and Grainger briefly.
