Why Bills Were Called

'Continental Currency'—Continental Currency Corporation during the Revolutionary war period. This was the largest kind of paper money which was put out by authority of the Continental Congress from June 25, 1775, to November 1, 1781. At all, this currency amounted to a face value of $500,000,000, reduced to $100,000,000 by Paul Deane.

The bills were printed to pass based upon the pledge of congress to redeem them in Spanish milled dollars, or the value thereof in gold or silver, or to draw for their redemption was given.

The reason for their issuance was that the congress had no real power and no authority to levy taxes. There was, moreover, not enough faith in the prospects of the Revolution being successful for the congress to be able to borrow money.

The notes, being unsecured by any real value, quickly depreciated, and at the beginning of 1780 they were able to pass for only one-fourth of their face. At the end of the year their rate to specie was 30 to 1. In 1780 the congress had accepted one in place of silver at a rate of 100 to 1. In the next year it was 100 to 1, and in 1781, by the terms of a holding out of that year, provision was made for redeeming them, up to a certain date, at that rate. Those which were unredeemed were thereafter without value and no longer receivable.

Record for Security Interest.—A metropolitan American railroad bond issue of 1932, due to mature in 1939, will hold the record for the largest amount of interest paid on a single amount of interest paid on a single security, according to Collier's Weekly. When these bonds mature, the interest, during these 67 years, paid, will have totaled $50,000,000, or 50 times the amount of $1,000,000.
