ESTABLISHING A SAFFEGUARD

It was interesting to note the wide cleavage of opinions expressed at the hearings held in Barrington recently for the purpose of discussing recommendations made by the Lake county zoning commission for zoning Cuba township outside the village of Barrington. Those property owners present at the meeting could be classified into three groups—estate owners, subdivision owners and farm owners.

While little was said in concurrence with the theory of zoning or what its values were, the principle was not attacked as much as was the question of the "financial future" of property owners. The zoning commission has established districts throughout the township, as was done all over the county, whereby land in designated portions could be used under certain restrictions. The classes ranged from tracts of 60 or more acres down to house lots of 8000 square feet. Farm land was bulked in its class as it is now used for such work.

Estate owners were present at the hearings, and because of their interests made the most of the hearing. They naturally favored the zoning act and generally agreed with the proposal. Those interested in the sale of subdivision lots outside the Fox river district and the minimum footage allowance for each lot was greatly in excess of the present size lot.

Farm owners were generally of the opinion that the zoning ordinance would be a handicap in the event they would want to go into building.

It would seem that the subdivision owners had a justifiable complaint. But, it may be argued, what they might lose in the quantitative sale of lots will be less than the gain from the increased prices for large lots, which will have the purchaser interested protected from encroachment by a neighbor's unfitness dwelling.

Zoning of rural areas has rapidly become a necessity. It furnishes the necessary checks against junk yards and many obnoxious types of enterprises that may spring up. The theory of zoning a rural section is no different from that of zoning a town or city. It is to prevent the unwise and ignorant owner from erecting any structure or starting any business that furthers a personal end and is detrimental to the interest of the neighborhood.

The zoning ordinance, as drafted by the commission and read at the hearings, is sufficiently flexible to allow changes to be made in the future should conditions warrant. It seems to be a future development of merit would be allowed to proceed.

GARDENING TIME DRAWS NEAR

The new seed catalogue arrived the other day. Flowers of brilliant hues and described in evocative phrases fill the pages. Flower literature is a compelling work of art and creates the irresistible urge to get out into the garden and among the flower beds with a trowel and a package of seeds.

The arrival of literature is timely indeed. For now is the time for civil-minded residents to give thought to the annual "out-of-door housecleaning." Although the scenery is very drab appearing still, "spring fever" makes us realize that Nature's forces are busy preparing for the advent of their annual show.

Cooperation between residents of Barrington and those forces of Nature this spring will go a long way toward making this community a more attractive and healthful one. Individuals should bend their efforts to extend the good organization to the last several years by local garden organizations. Cleaner, more attractive lawns may extra dividends be gained by these pleasing appearances throughout the year.

The Review will not sponsor a "yard and garden" contest this year. It is sincerely hoped that individual initiative will carry on the good work.

SHIPPING THE BURDEN

Discharging alien WPA laborers from Cook and Lake county projects will do little to relieve the local relief situation until the aliens are removed from their own country. When they are no longer able to get aid from the federal government, they will turn to local relief supervisors for direct assistance. The whole thing then becomes merely a shifting of the burden from one group to another.

For the last several months the county WPA administrators have been removing aliens from project payroll. This while no one will criticize the federal government for taking on the burden, it is not entitled to receive assistance from its pocketbook, the fact remains that local town bodies are being handed an additional burden while they are being unloaded. And the supervisors will have to take care of aliens for no one really would want a person to starve or freeze to death.

Town governments should depend upon a direct 30-cent tax on real estate, plus whatever help they are able to get from the state sales tax fund, to carry the townward shift. The problem of obtaining more money to carry out its work remains greater in the face of the federal government's lack-
